Then Sri Krishna was jumping on top of the head (of cobra), thus blood started oozing out of all his fangs, and once his life was coming to an end, his appearance became faded and (colourless) pale; then Sri Krishna by using force in many ways, brought his body out on the sides of the tank. Due to the greater flow of water on the sides of the tank, Krishna managed to pull the cobra out by tying ropes on all the four sides. (214)

The black serpent's mates then said :

Swaiyya'

Then all the cobra's mates, including their off springs, with folded hands requested him, "O Lord! Pray save them! We have come for seeking this boon from you. If you had bestowed nectar to us, we would have brought the same since we are bestowed with poison, we have brought the same to you. So our (male) mate was not at fault. After uttering these words, they stood there with heads bowed down. (215)

The cobra's mates (female) again said, "O Lord! We are always worried about the blue jay, so we rushed to this tank to hide ourselves. Though our (male) mate was very haughty, and he used to consider himself as the greatest of all. O Lord! He could not recognize your greatness due to his egoism. O worldy Lord! O fountain (ocean) of Grace! You had broken the ten hoods of Ravana, in the form of Ram, and we fools, never realised the truth, and thus have faced destruction." (216)

If the blue Jay bothers you, then mention my name to him. When Sri Krishan allowed the big cobra to go, he went to the sandy area and lay there being exhausted. (217)

The poet had remarked :

Swaiyya'

That cobra, being afraid of Sri Krishna, then rushed towards his resting place. He lay in the sand jast as a person keeping nightly vigil later sleeps being free in comfort. After fighting it out against Krishna he had lost his haughtiness from the mind, and was engaged in the love of the Lord hereafter. After praising Krishna he lay in the sand just as a farmer, after throwing borox in the field, goes back home (care free). (218)

When he regained consciousness, he fell at the feet of the Lord (Krishna) and said, "O my Lord! Being tired I had been lying down, but when I woke up I have come to take your blessings (to get a touch of your lotus-feet). O Krishna! Which ever place you have given me, is good enough for me, after saying this, he ran away. Then Krishna remarked, "By seeking my foot mark on your hood, the blue jay will not bother you any more; as my carriage (blue jay) is fully engrossed in my love. (and would not disobey). (219)

Swaiyya'

After the (Kali Na'g) black Cobra was sent away, Sri Krishna came back to the family members. Then Balram rushed towards Krishna and hugged him and then the mother kissed him, and her suffering was over. Then the mother gave away one thousand cows with golden horns in alms, as a sacrifice to Krishna's safety. The poet Siam has said, "The mother developed great love for Krishna and gave away alms (boons) to Brahmins in plenty. (220)

She distributed handfuls of pearl necklaces, diamonds and gems and while giving away pure gold ornaments to brahmins, the mother Jasodha said, "Thank God! That my son had come back safe from the black Cobra's attack." (221)

Now the episode of Davanal begins

Swaiyya'

After the departure of the black Cobra, all residents of Brij were happy and at night-fall went home to sleep in peace. But in the morning they saw a huge fire raging on all the ten sides (directions) and they all (Brij residents) started crying. Then they suddenly thought of Krishna who could only help them. So all of them approached Krishna. Then the benevolent Lord (Krishna) told them, "Close your eyes, and in the meantime all their sufferings came to an end. (222)

When all of them closed their eyes, then Sri Krishna consumed all the (fire) flames within himself and brought the town's suffering to an end, casting away all the fear of his disciples. Those, who have the benevolent Lord as their mainstay, had cast away their heat of mind (the burning within) as if by sprinkling water the flames were cooled down. (223)

Kabit

The dark complexioned Krishna had, by asking them to close their eyes, and enlarging his body size, and giving solace to each heart, had consumed the fire flames (within his body). The benevolent Lord had, through his deceitful action, saved his town. Siam poet has said, He has performed the most difficult function and his praiseworthiness had spread far and wide. By diverting the attention of the people, he had munched the demon Davanal with his teeth and had devoured him like a juggler performs his acts of magic. (224)

Swaiyya'

After the elapse of the month of Magh (January), the season of Phalgun (February) had started, then all started playing the game of coloured waters (holi). They were singing songs clapping and all the children together called the holi as shameless creature. The small urchins throw dry colours on each other and sprinkle coloured waters with the help of syringes (pumps). The poet Siam has said, that both the brothers Krishna and Balram with the beautiful dark and fair complexioned faces, combine together and play a game of fun and frolic. (225)

The Basant season (spring) had ended, and the hot season had begun, then Krishna started a play. Krishna and Balram became leaders of two groups, and the children of both sides enjoyed the fun. There was demon called Parlamb who was a cheat and he assumed the form of a boy, which no one could make out. Taking Balram on his shoulders Parlamb was about to fly away (with Balram), Balram had thrown him on the ground by striking him with fists. (226)

Krishna and Balram were the two leaders and the other loving children divided themselves into two groups. The demon (Parlamb) was on Krishna's side and in the game Balram had won whereas Krishna was the loser. Then Krishna said, "Come and ride on me." Balram said, "I cannot ride on you, as you will not be able to carry my weight. Then Balram rode on Parlamb's body and he was about to fly off. But the mighty Balram had struck him with his fists and threw him down on the ground. (227)

Now the episode of the game of hide and seek begins

Swaiyya'

When Balram had killed Pralamb, then Krishna went to look after his cows. At that time the cows were kissing their calves, asthey were their mothers. Seeing the affection of the cows, Krishna felt delighted and started the game of hide and seek. The poet had felt the beauty of this scene within his mind as praiseworthy. (228)

One child would close the eyes of another child, while the other children hid themselves, then he would leave his eyes opened, and the first one runs after other children to touch them. Whosoever is touched by him, then gives his turn by getting his eyes closed by another child, and tries to touch the others (by chasing them). The other children run away from him by hook or crook, and he could not approach anyone, then he again gets his eyes closed. The poet Siam has said, Krishna was enjoying the game, and the beauty of this scene is indescribable. (229)

Swiayya'

At the end of the summer season, the monsoon season started. Krishna, alongwith cows and the calves, started roaming in the lanes of the jungle. During the rainfall, he would sit in the caves of the mountains, and sing songs of his choice. This scene was greatly praisesworthy which has been described by the peot in this manner. (230)

He sings songs in various Ragas like Sorath, Sarang, Gujri, Lalit and Bhairav or Deepak alongwith Ragas Todi, Megh and Malar. Then he would sing Ragas like Jaitsri, Malsiri, Paraj and Sri Rag which are very pleasing. The poet Siam has said that Krishna played many tunes on his flute in many Ragas. (231)

Kabit

Krishna was playing on his flute Ragas, like Lalit, Dhansari, Kidar, Malwa, Bihagra, and Gjuri. Also he was playing Maru, Paraj, Kanra, Kalyan, Kukabh, Bilawal and Murchhana. Then again standing under the shade of a tree Krishna was playing Bhairou, Plasi, Bhim, Deepak, Gouri, Nat, who was being worshipped. On hearing the sound of the flute, the deer-eyed milk-maids were rushing towards the jungle leaving their homes (in search of their) for Kanha. (232)

Swaiyya'

The season of winter (kartik) had started, the star of August had risen (in sky) and there was some water flowing in the rivers. Krishna was sporting an Oleander flower in his head (hair) and was playing his flute since the morning and singing songs. Siam Poet has described this beautiful scene in his poetry like this. It appeared that (the god of) love had awakened in their hearts or they were crawling like a wounded snake. (233)

The milkmaids were saying-

Swaiyya'

All the milkmaids were saying, "O Mother! This flute had earned the (boon) benefit of a great virtuous deed, or performed a Yagna, or had undergone a penance, or taken bath at a holy place of pilgrimage or it had undergone training with celestial singers (musicians) or had been trained by the god of love, or it had been made (produced) by Brahma himself. The poet Siam has stated in its honour, that Krishna had endeared it (flute) to his lips. (234)

The son of Nand (Krishna) plays on his flute while the poet Siam sings its praises. Everyone, hearing its tune, gets enticed by it and gets endeared to it. All the milkmaids were filled with the love of Krishna and were answering like this, "Krishna's face was like the rose flower and from the flute, (pipe) the rose water was flowing in the forn ot tunes. (235)

On listening the flute tunes, the deer were getting ensnared while the birds were being endeared to its tunes and spreading their wings. Even the waters of Jamuna were enamoured by the flute and flowing upwards while human beings were watching him with gasped eyes. The peot Siam has stated, on hearing the flute, the calves were getting mesmerised thus forgetting to eat grass even with the mouth. The women folk leaving their spouses, were rushing attracted towards Krishna, just as while becoming an ascetic a person throws away millions of rupees (without caring for it). (236)

All the birds like koel and parrot; and animals like deer, lion and even god of love (Kamdev) were enamoured on seeing the beautiful appearance of Krishna. All the residents of the town were feeling elated and even moon was feeling belittled (abashed) before the beauty of Krishna's face. When he played the flute, then all the Ragas were completely devoted to it. The dark complexioned Kanha would play his flute so nicely as to mesmerise even Narad, passing that way. (237)

His deer-like eyes, delicate waist like that of a tiger, and the nose like a parrot, would beautify his appearance, while his back was like that of a pigeon, and his lips were like the nectar. His speech was sweet like that of a Koel or harial; So the poet Siam has remarked, That Kahna was looking glorious in his appearance; and all are saying in a tone filled with modesty while the birds were feeling annoyed that Krishna had stolen their (beautiful) limbs; lest he might steal away their shape also. (238)

The rose (flower) even could not dare face Krishna's beauty, and even the great pearls and rubies were feeling betittled before him. The lotus petals or harcissus flowers (nargas) were feeling belittled on seeing his beauty. The poet Siam has described his beauty in his poetry that he had been traversing all along East and West, but could not find anyone else equal to him in beauty. (239)

During the month of December (maghar) all the milk maids were worshipping Durga in order to acquire him as their spouse. They were bathing early in the morning in Jamuna whose faces were looking more beautiful than the lotus flower even. They would sing songs in Bilwal Raga and with arms clasped were singing praises for Krishna and they had developed passionate love for him and they were behaving almost shamelessly showing their love for him. All the fair and dark complexioned milk-maids were singing Bilwal Raga; even the fat or thin maids were keen to have Krishna as their spouse. So the poet Siam has said, that even the moon's light feels faded before their appearance and yearning (for him). They were bathing in Jamuna waters as if flowers were blossoming at home. (241)

The milkmaids were bathing in Jamuna waters without any fear and were singing Krishna's praises by clapping in fun, and getting together. They all were so happily speaking as if they were pleased more than being in Indra's palace. The poet Siam has said that they were floating in Jamuna, full of beauty and it appeared as if it were a tank of lotus-flowers (blooming allover). (242)

The milk-maids were addressing the goddess thus -

By taking dust (mud) in hand they were patting it as if it were goddess. They were bowing to her with love and paying their obeisance umpteen times, they were saying, "O Durga! We are worshipping you to bestow us the boon of whatever we have thought in mind; that is Krishna was being sought as a spouse for them, whose face was as beautiful as the moon's beauty. (243)

They were fixing saffron and rice on the idol of Durga and were applying crushed sandal wood on the forehead and then were offering flowers and were trying with love to let flies fly away. They were offering dresses, incense, pots and gifts like betels and were going round the idol with reverence. The milkmaids were making all efforts to gain the friendship of Krishna or as a spouse for themselves. (244)

The milkmaids were telling the goddess:

Kabit

"O goddess ! You are the killer of demons, bestowing Salvation to sinners, casting away all our sufferings, and are all-powerful. You are delivering the Vedas, giving kingdom to Indra, and the light of Durga was shining brightly throughout the world. Who else was there on equal footing with her in the world? The light and illumination of her face cannot be found elsewhere in the sky, or on the land or attained by meditation. The light of your appearance was much superior to anyother. O goddess! Your light and rediance was pervading throughout the world just as the sun shines during the day, the radiance of Indra seated in the assembly of gods, Mahadev among the deities are all shining (similarly your light radiates). (245)

All the milkmaids were praying with folded hands saying, O Chandika! Listen to our prayer! You alone had saved the gods (from demons), had given salvation to millions of sinnners, had killed Rand and Mund and had destroyed demons like Sumbh and Nishumbh. O mother! We will always worship you rather than Saligram. At the same time, the goddess, being pleased with them, who had won all the battles, said quickly, "I have accepted your prayer and bestowed the boon you had asked for." (246)

The goddess, told the milkmaids,

Swiayya'

Durga bestowed this boon to the milkmaids and said "Krishna will be your spouse now." On hearing this sound with their ears, they hailed the goddess Durga millions of times by standing up." The beauty of this scene, as viewed by the poet has been described as.\ the heart of these maids was endeared to Krishna and they were enamoured by Krishna's love completely. (247)

All the milkmaids then bowed at the feet of the goddess and then praised Durga by all means. They said, "O Mother! You are creator of the whole world and destroyer of all our afflictions. All the musicians of Shiva are assuming your own form only, while the poet has described the praises of this scene as, "The milkmaids were blushing with redness due to their happiness, when their desires were fulfilled in getting what they had wished for. (248)

Having received this boon (from the goddess) all the milkmaids came back home fully satisfied and delighted. All of them joined in a chorus to sing songs, and everyone congratulated the other one in their delight. They were all standing in a formation (line), and the poet has described their praise like this. It appeared as if, on attaining the moon, there were water-lillies sprouting from the pond (from one side to the other side). (249)

As the day dawned all milmaids joined together and moved towards the Jamuna river. All were singing songs together and moving towards the river, being happy beyond description (they were without themselves). That time Krishna also went there and drank water from Jamuna. On his arrival there, all were quiet, so Krishna looked at them and said, "Why are you not talking? Why are you so quiet? (250)

The removal of milkmaid's clothes begins

Swaiyya'

When the milk maids were bathing Krishna took away their clothes and climbed upon a tree. Then they were smiling among themselves and someone went and requested him, "O Krishna! The milkmaids told Krishna.

Swaiyya'

The poet Siam has stated that the milkmaid said like this, "O Kanha! You have learnt this clever move? Look at your father Nand! Then look at your brother, who is called gentle (They are gentlemen and you have started such mischief). You have removed our clothes also deceitfully. The mighty Kans will kill you on hearing such news." Then Krishna replied, "Who will kill me?" I will split your king kans into two pieces like a lotus petal." (252)

Then Krishna said to the milkmaid

Swaiyya'

Without getting out of water, I will not give your clothes. Why are you staying in water now, hiding yourself? And your body being sucked (cut) by the leeches. I have no fear of the king Kans, form whose name you wanted to frighten me. I will throw Kans into the fire by catching of his hair, just as the wood is thrown in the flames of burning fire." (253)

When Krishna told her this thing, then (out of fun) he climbed higher on the tree. Then the milmmaids were annonyed and said in anger, "We will go and complain to your mother and father." Then Krishna replied, "You may tell anyone you like. If anyone (asks) tells me anything on your complaint, then I will deal with him myself." (254)

Krishna then said, .

Then Krishna laughed and said, "O dear ones! Unless you come out of water, I will never give back your clothes. O fair and black complexioned ones! You are staying in water unnecessarily and suffering with cold, come outside quickly. O fattish ones and lean ones! You keep your hands on your front and back portions (parts) and come out of water. When they came out of water, Krishna said, "I will not give your clothes, unless you bow to me with folded hands." (255)

Krishna again said lovingly, "O maids! Listen to me! You forget about your prestige (feeling ashamed), throwing it to the winds and with folded hands pray to me. I am telling you again and again. O dear ones, why do you not agree to my demand? Else I will tell everyone about you and I swear on the Lord." (256)

O Kanha! "Why are you shooting the arrows of love at us by using the bows of your eye-brows?" Why are you endearing yourself to us and coming towards us with a smiling face? Why do you have a tilted turban on your head, while throwing sarcastic remarks with your eyes? O lovable person! Why are you making us alluring with your presence while forcing us to swear by you?" (271)

When the women of Brij land heard these words with their own ears, all of them started laughing getting interested. They reached near the tree by walking slowly towards him. Their eyes were like the ropes and the god of love had ensnared them to these ropes. Sri Krishna, filled with the sexual desires, was looking towards them just as a hungry hawk swoops down on its prey down below. (272)

Sri Krishna whose appearance was a personification of love, having a face like the moon, with a nose like a parrot, and deer-like eyes; whose body was shining like gold, the teeth like pomen-grade and the neck like a pigeon, and sweet talk like the koel (bird). The poet Shiam has stated, that guardian of cows kanha said smilingly, "O milkmaids! All of you maids have enamoured me with your love, by twisting your eyes and making all sorts of signs and symbols." (273)

Kanha was a great lover of pleasure. When he saw all the milkmaids bathing naked in the river suddenly, then their love endeared him (attracted him). So the milkmaids said, "You have to swear by Jasodha, so tell us the truth, as to why have you surrounded us, here, with what motive in mind? All were clamouring for their clothes, we are your slaves (maids). O Kanha! How could we slaute you with foldèd hands, as we are feeling ashamed before you." (274)

Kahna said, O Milkmaids, "I have committed a sin by removing (stealing) your clothes and have made you suffer the cold weather. Infact, I am completely enamoured by your beauty, so I have located you here after searching for you all over. So just pay me your respects with folded hands and take away your clothes. If you do not agree to this, then you will have to suffer and swear by me." Then Kanha told the milkmaids with a smile, "Listen to my benign talk. If we have shown love for each other through the eyes meeting each other's then where is the question of nakedness?" (275)

You need have no shame from me and need not hide anything from me; so you just salute (hail) me with folded hands and listen (agree) to my request. Kanha told them similingly, that "I am simply alive to see your deer-like eyes. I will not tell anything to your people at home, so you will not suffer any loss of prestige." (276)

"Let us salute Sri Krishna with folded hands." The milkmaids talked about it amongst themselves and laughed. Then all the milkmaids, said these words like nectar to Krishna collectively, "Now you should feel happy, as we have agreed to whatever you have demanded of us. Now there is nothing secret between you and us (no distinction), and whatever is liked by you, is most auspicious for us also." (278)

O dear milkmaids, "Your eye brows are like bows and your charming eyes are like arrows of love, and your looks are like a piercing spear. Your contenance is like the moon, with your hair (tresses) like a snake; and with a glance only the heart gets enamoured and that is why I had requested you, when my mind was enticed by your love and charm (aronsing my sexual desires). So I have asked you to allow me to kiss your cheeks. I swear, I will not inform your parents (people), about it." (279)

Then all the milkmaids collectively accepted his demand happily, whatever Krishna (Siam) had demanded of them. They developed immense joy of love within themselves and they were all swept away by his love. When they forgot (gave up) about any hesitation in mind, then Sri Krishna said smilingly, "Now listen to me. Today I have gained the treasure (wealth) of your love and merriment." (280)

The the milkmadis said to one another, O friend (female)! Listen and watch, whatever Krishna had remarked. Listen! He has developed extreme love for us and got immersed in the love, without any count, for us as he had no hesitation about our (being naked), that is why, he had spoken in that tone with a smile. Now the boon of Durga (goddess) had come out true (had become a reality), as the god-mother was always true and virtuous (right)." (281)

Then Krishna indulged in sex-play with them and giving back their clothes allowed them to go back (let them go). Then all the milkmaids, praising the goddess Durga (Chandi) collectively, went away to their homes. They had developed great joy and excitement in their hearts which has been praised and related by the poet as such (they were all looking charming) just as the Earth, after a heavy shower (downpour), becomes beautiful with greenery all around. (282)

The milkmaids were saying -

A'ril

"O Mother Chandika! You are truly (really) praiseworthy, who had given us such a spouse. This day was really wonderful (most welcome), when Kanha had befriended them. "O Durga! Now give us this benediction (boon) that we may continue to have a glance of Kanha for many more days to come (in future also). (283)

One day, at some auspicious moment, all the milkmaids were collectively talking about many pleasant things and started enumerating the various limbs of Krishna. (291)

Swaiyya'

Someone said, Krishna's countenance was charming; another one said his nose was very beautiful while someone else said, his waist was delicate (lean) like the tiger, and someone in her ecstacy said that his body was of gold while another woman said, his eyes were like the deer's. Thus the poet Siam, while describing the praises said, just as people love their being, the milkmaids had developed love of Kanha in their body and mind. (292)

On seeing the moon-like face of Kanha, all the women-folk of Brij-town were getting endeared to him. On the other side, Bhagwan (Lord) Krishna was also enamoured by them and due to the boon of the goddess he had also developed keenness (love) for them, though he was staying separately in a different home. The poet Siam has understood this praiseworthy situation, that both the souls had mingled with each other. (Krishna's soul and the maids' souls) There was no (shame or) safeguard of honour as the bonds had been broken like the chords of (threads of) lotus-stems. (293)

They all had developed love for Krishna, while he had also attachment for them. All of them cannot remain happy without meeting each other even for a moment, so all (start) come out in the morning for taking bath. The poet Siam has stated, the Lord was under their control who had earlier defeated huge armies of demons. Krishna was manifesting his worldly drama, and in few days he will defeat (kill) Kans also. (294)

The poet Siam has stated, On one hand Krishna was spending sleepless nights while on the other hand the milkmaids were also having no sleep, becuase of their love for him. On seeing Kanha the beautiful, with their eyes, all the milkmaids were endeared to him. Due to their love for him, they were heard saying, "that tomorrow we will come early morning for the games, so that the village folks will not recognize us." (295)

When the day dawned, the sparrows were chirruping, the lotus flowers had blossomed and the cows had gone for grazing; the milkmen had got up, even Nand had got awakened, and the queen (of milkmadis). Jasodha had also got up. The poet Siam has stated, that very moment the benevolent Lord of Grace Sri Krishna and the proud Balram had also got up. The milkmen had gone for bathing while Sri Krishna went towards the milkmaids. (296)

Sri Krishan, going to the milkmaids, was talking about love and sexual desires and apart from love does not talk anything else. (no other episode) Sri Krishna, having enamoured the milkmaids with his bewitching eyes, was talking to them, and telling them, that they did not know about the bliss of love; it is known only to those, who have exprienced it. "O milkmaid, listen to me! The person, who studies the lesson of love and then practises it, being carefree from everything else (in the world), he alone could experience and enjoy this bliss. (297)

Then the milkmaid said to Krishna,

Swaiyya'

O friend! You tell us all about the mode of love and its bliss, we are very keen to know it. We have developed love for your glance, and we have developed a desire to know our inner feelings (to know the need of our breasts). They were all laughing and talking to him with pleasure. Those milkmaids, who felt attracted to the Lord, gaiined Salvation (freedom from worldly things); so this was the state of those women folk. (298)

Here the chapter on removal of clothes in Krishna Incarnation episodė of the Dasam Sakand in Bachittar Natak is completed. Now the episode of sending milkmen to the house of Brahmins begins.

Couplet

After having expressed his love affair with the milkmaids (sexual desires fulfilled) and having bathed in Jamuna, then Krishna left for the jungle for grazing the cows. (299)

Krishna was proceeding forward while praising the trees but all the milkmaids' children accompanying him, were getting restless with hunger. (300)

Swaiyya'

Krishna was saying, "The leaves of these trees are very good, while the fruits were also praiseworthy alongwith the beautiful flowers. Even if there was a desire to go home for food but the shade of these trees was also very soothing for relaxing here. Kahna then stood underneath those trees and taking his flute in hand he then started playing it. Even the wind, on hearing the sweet tune stopped for a moment, while the river Jamuna being impressed by the flute tunes, stopped its flow. (301)

The flute was playing the tunes Malsiri, Jaitsri, Sarang and Gouri Ragas; then Sorath, perfect Malar and Bilawal tunes were sweeter than nectar even, and no one was feeling bad (bitter) about it. Krishna used to play such beautiful tunes on his flute that all the women folk of the gods and demons were attracted towards it on hearing its beautiful sound. On hearing the tune of the flute, the daughter (Radha) of the milkman Brikhbhan, like a young deer (she), came running there. (302)

The milkman's children then paid their obeisance to Krishna with folded hands and said, "O Master! Listen, we are feeling very hungry! The houses of milkmen are left far behind. While playing around (various games) we have lost all our senses, and we were moving around alongwith you only. Kanha on listening to their sweet talk, said lovingly, "Go to the house of Mathra's brahmins and ask for some food from them to eat. I am telling you truth, there is no cheating anyway." (303)

Kanha said

Swaiyya'

Krishna again told the milkmen children, this is Kanspuri (Mathura) and go there, and find out the houses of brahmins (Yagna place) by asking someone. Then you request them that Kanha was feeling restless with hunger, so he was asking for some food to eat." (304)

Whatever Kanha said was accepted by the milkmaids' children who bowed to Krishna and touching his feet, went away. They went to Mathura and went to the house of respectable brahmins. After paying their obeisance many times (millions of times) they requested them that Kanha was waiting (away from the town) and asking for some food. Now look at his clever move that being in (assuming) the form of a child, he deceived the brahmins also. (305)

The brahmins said :

Swaiyya'

Fully enraged, the brahmins replied, that they had come to them (brahmins) for food. Kanha and Balram both are great liars (cheats) like them." We satiate our hunger only after asking others for rice (cereal) (by begging) and under these circustances you have come to us asking for food. Saying this, the brahmins were furious with rage. When the brahmins did not give food to the children, they were desperate and came back from their houses. They left Mathura and passing by the houses of brahmins, they came near Jamuna. When Balram saw them coming without any food, he said to Krishna, "These brahmins always come to us asking for food, but while they were asked to give food, they have run away (refused)". (307)

Kabit

These brahmins are great liars, weaklings, with a dirty mind and are characterless belonging to a bad family lineage and casteless. They are great thieves and low-caste people (scavengers), who lay down their lives for food, and are engaged in wickedness and robbery. They are lacking common sense and are known to be very clever, though they have no sense. They possess no knowledge but are moving around with great speed (like deer) (they move around with the speed of deer). They are very crude, though they call themselves very smart and move around like the animals in a herd in the town. (308)

If you allow further, I will pull down the whole town of Mathura and throw it in the river Jamuna. "O Sri Krishna! I am hesitant only due to your presence else I will alone cut off their heads and throw them away. (309)

Then Krishna said,

Swaiyya

"O Balram! Please control your anger. Then Krishna told the milkmaids' children, "Brahmins were Gurus of the whole world, and making the children realise this thing fully, Kanha made the children go to the brahmins once again. So the children agreeing to Kanha's talk and taking his permission went back to the capital of the Kingdom of Kans (Mathura) and requested the brahmins, asking for food which was required by Krishna, but the proud brahmins did not listen to them at all. So we have come back in great wrathfulness". "O benevolent Lord! We are fed up and desperate due to hunger, so please make some arrangement, else the body strength will become almost nil." (311)

All milkmen's children bowed to Kanha and went back to the brahmin's houses again. They told the women folk about Krishna being hungry. All the brahmin women got up hearing this and got excited. They rushed to meet Krishna. Due to their spiritual bliss all their sufferings came to an end. (313)

Even on trying to dissuade them by their spouses (brahmins) the women folk could not be stopped from rushing to meet Kanha. Some of them managed to go, while some others who could not go physically, their hearts were with Krishna. The poet has described the beauty of this scene just as a barrier of straw could not block the path of a strong current of water from flowing onwards (and dropping the wall of straw). (314)

The fortunate women folk of brahmins who were having beautiful faces like the moon and deer-like eyes had rushed to meet Krishna. They went (as per poet Siam) to pay their respects to Krishna; and all their body limbs were auspicious and even Brahma could not recount their limbs (affected thus). These women-folk had come out of their homes just as the snakes (female) come out of their holes on uttering the magic words (mantras) in large numbers. (315)

Just as the enemy of Shiva, the god love (Ka'mdev) had personally extricated the beauty of Nature to form the body of Krishna whose eyes were delicate like the lotus-flower, the head was decorated with the crown of pea-cock wings, whose eye-brows were like a bow and the eye lashes were like arrows and millions of moons could not match his beauty. What to talk of friends, even the heart of foes would be enamoured by his charm. (So the poet has described Krishna's beauty as above). (317)

The poet Siam has stated that Krishna was standing undernealth the trees with his hand of friendship given to the hands of the milkmen's children. He was wearing yellow apparels on the body, which were endearing everyone who watched him, giving one solace. The way the poet has described the beauty of this scene, has been stated in the same manner that it appeared as if lightning was flashing through the dark clouds in the months of monsoon (sa'wan) (318)

The brahmin women-folk, on seeing Krishna's bewitching eyes, were fully enamoured in honour of his beauty. They had totally forgotten about their homes (in his love) just as the cotton balls fly off with a gale of wind. The poet Siam has stated, that the fire of separation (in these women) was raging in their hearts just as the flames rise higher on throwing oil into the fire. Their condition could be compared with a magnet stone which makes an iron needle in water move up and down due to its attraction towards the magnet. (319)

The brahmin womenfolk had felt greatly enamoured with the love of Krishna on seeing his beauty and all their (pangs of separation) suffering had come to an end; just as the very touch of (Ganga) the mother of Bhisham, casts away all the sins of anyone, the very glance of Kanha (Siam) would cast a spell on anyone looking at his face, beautiful like the clouds, and would endear his heart with closed eyes towards Krishna just as a rich (wealthy) person would close all the doors (for safe custody) of the house, after hoarding his wealth (money) within the building. (320)

When the womenfolk (brahmin) came to their real self (gained consciousness) then Krishna laughed and said, "Now you go back to your homes, and during day time you co-operate with your brahmin spouse, but at night you could all sing my praises only; when you will meditate on me with concentration and love, you will have no fear of the god of death (yama) If you will meditate like this, then you will all attain Salvation (from worldly ills), as a result of your worship. (321)

The brahmin womenfolk then said :

Swaiyya'

The brahmin women folk then said, "O Krishna! We will not leave your company. We will move around day and night alongwith you. If you go back to Brij (town) then also we shall accompany you. Our heart is endeared to you now, and the mind does not think of the home now. Just as an ascetic, after attaining full meditation (Yoga), does not bother any more about looking after his wealth. Kanha them said -

Swaiyya'

The Lord (Sri Krishna) after considering their love for him, said these words, "You go back to your homes. You go back to your spouses and explain the details of the praises of Kanha to them, thus giving them Salvation. You talk to your sons, grand sons and your spouses (about the Lord) thus relieving them of all sufferings. Then having the aroma of the sandal wood Krishna's Name should be recited, which would convert all other trees into the sandal wood (give Salvation to all worldly people) with its aroma. (323)

Swaiyya'

The brahmin women folk accepted the words of Krishna, which were pure like the nectar. The preachings (sermons) which they received from Sri Krishna were much better and Sri Krishna was much better and higher than what any ascetic could give them. When these woman talked to their spouses (Brahmins), then their plight was miserable with blackened faces, while the women became red faced, like Ratis (weight) (324)

After hearing the talk of the women folk about Sri Krishna, all the brahmins felt repentant, saying that their knowledge of Vedas was worthless and deserved condemnation, as the milkmaids' children had asked for food from us earlier, but we were arrogant with egoism and did not send food for the Lord (Bhagwan) and now the time is gone by and we have woken up now. But we are rather fortunate that these women (who have gained his blessings) are our spouses (wives). (325)

All the brahmins, cursing themselves, then got together and started singing praises of Krishna. "Sri Krishna was the master of all, which has been stated clearly by the Vedas. We knew all this but preferred not to go to him, having the fear of king Kans, who may not put us to death. "O Sri Krishna! We now have clearly realised you as our Lord and we are saying this truth (with heart) and not just for the sake of saying only. (326)

Kabit

The Lord, who had killed Pootna, who had destroyed the body of demon Trina Varat, who had broken (split) the head of Aghasur, and who had granted Salvation to Ahliya, who had split apart the beak of Bakasur, who had split apart Bhoomasur in a manner akin to tearing apart a piece of wood with a saw, who had assumed the form of Ram and devastated the whole army of the demons and had handed over Lanka's Kingdom to Vibhushan, the same Lord-Sublime had taken the form of Sri Krishna (as an incarnation of Vishnu) and transformed the lives of brahmin women folk to such an extent just as the Lord, assuming the form of a mendicant, an Incarnation of the Lord, gives solace to the world. (327)

Swiayya'

The royal poet has stated that "On hearing the story of the brahmin women folk, the brahmins said, let us hear some other episodes, as Kanha's episodes are so dear to our hearts, so let us hear with full deliberation which would make our lives worth while and make them successful. Then the brahmin women folk laughed and said, "first of all, you all should pay your obeisance to the king (Lord), then only you could hear from us the loving episodes of the Lord with great interest. (328)

Then the brahmins brought many preparations of food like meat curry, gravy, fried meat, fried meat of the lamb's disc, meat gravy, rice (palao) preparation, sweetened flour or rice, ladoos and preparation of soaked rice, well prepared date fruit, rice cooked in milk (sweetened, curd, milk or pakoras and many more preparations beyond count and according to poet Siam, Krishna had all these foods and enjoying the food went back home while praising the love of the brahmins enroute. (329)

Sri Krishna then fully satiated with foods and having complete bliss went back home singing songs. Balram was looking conspicuous alongwith Sri Krishna just as dark and white clouds move together with great eagerness; then Kanha took up his flute and started playing on it. Hearing the tunes of the flute even Jamuna waters became motionless with ecstasy and wind got confused with love and its charm. (330)

All the ragas were being played on the flute like Ramkali, Sorath, sarang and malsiri alongwith Gouri, jaitsri, Gond Malar and Bilawal. What to talk of human beings, even the women folk of the gods and demons were mesmerised and enticed with the flute tunes. All the young girls of Brij town were rushing towards him on hearing flute tunes, just as the deer rushes on hearing the sound of drum beats. (331)

Sri Krishna was playing on his flute ragas like Basant, Bhairou and hindol and lalita mixed with dhanasri was being played also. Then Malwa, Kalyan, malkos, and Maru ragas were being played by the blissful Krishna in the jungle. All the women folk of the gods, demons and even snakes were thrilled to hear the flute tunes and they had lost their sense of proportion. "O friend! I feel that the flute was being played in all the ragas which seemed to be present within it. (332)

Even Vedas wer praising the benevolent Lord, the ocean of bliss (Krishna) and his aroma of elegance had pervaded all the three worlds. Even the young damsels of the gods, on hearing the flute tunes, came rushing towards Brij-town to reside there They were fully delighted to see his beauty alongwith the delightful music of the flute and were saying, "The Lord had created Krishna as an embodiment of Ragas when Kanha used to play the flute in the Jungles and gardens, then all the musicians (of Shiva) were enamoured and stars were absorbed with rapture. (333)

Swaiyya'

Thus Kanha, playing his flute came back home alongwith other colleagues fully delighted. All the milkmaid's children were singing, clapping and dancing while coming back. Sri Krishna was himself making them dance to his tunes and at night all of them went home and slept carelessly (334)

Here the chapter on winning over the brahmin woman folk of Krishna Incarnation, bringing food and their Salvation from the episodes of Bachittar Natak of Sri Dasam Sakand is completed.

All the milkmaid's children then one day said that the day of Indra's worship had come, so they decided to make preparations for making sweet pudding and other foods. When Nand was telling the milkmen about it Krishna said to himself in a different mood, "Who is this poor Indra. For whose whorship all the womenfolk of Brij town used to go? (336)

Kabit

Thus the benevolent (Lord) Krishna, ocean of Bliss said, "O dear father! For whose benefit have you made all these preparations? "Then Nand replied, for the worship of the god, who is supposed to be the master of the three worlds and all these preparations are made for his worship. Krishna then asked, who was this Master? Then Nand, gave the name of Indra (god) in reply. Then Krishna said, "What for are you worshipping Indra?" Then Nand replied, "For the protection of our cows, and praduction of grass and rainfall, the worship has come down to us from olden times as a custom." Sri Krishna said, "The people of Brij are rather lacking knowledge, without knowing that all this production acrues from the Lord Alimighty, whereas they feel it was due to Indra (god). (337)

So Kanha said,

Swaiyya'

O dear father and others, Listen to me! All these clouds are not under the control of Indra. In fact, the fearless Lord, who is the destroyer of fear also, is the sole giver, who gives and takes away also. Why do you go for Indra's worship? You should all worship the Lord-sublime, and all collectively meditate on Him with full concentration of mind and He alone will bestow all comforts on you." (338)

Has Brahma said this thing that Indra under the spell of Yagnas, sends these clouds? For the maintenance of the people, the Lord, through the help of the sun, arranges for the rainfall. (due to heat of sun, the water evaporates to form these clouds) The Lord only watches the functions of human beings, and then in the form of Shiva, He kills them all. He is one and only one, while His forms are varied just like the river, which spreads around in various rivulets. (339)

The poet Siam has stated, "That the Lord Alimighty alone is pervading everywhere, in the waters, (oceans) in the mountains, in the trees, on the land, including all the vegetation (grass etc.) in the gods and demons equally. The one Lord maintains and sustains all, including the birds, the lions and there is rainfall over the hordes of deer also. Now tell me, if anyone out of these, had worshipped Indra? (340)

Then Krishna laughed and told Nand, "O dear father! Listen to my request. You should worship the cows and the brahmins should be fed. Go to the Govardhan mountain for the worship as we take milk from cows, and we climb the mountains, which gives us pleasure and bliss and by giving (alms) gifts to brahmins, we wil win praises, in this world and in the next world also we will get the fruit of these alms-givings. (341)

Then Sri Krishna said to his father, "O dear father! Listen to me, if you are ready to believe, then only I will say. You all go to Govardhan mountain and worship it, then what could Indra do to you out of rage. (I will see to it) You have got a son like me, then why are you worried about Indra? I will kill him in one strike only. Ofather! I have told you Indra's secret, infact he would quit our place on accepting my superiority and prestige." (342)

Whatever Krishna had told to his father, Nand, was accepted by him without any questioning, Krishna had stretched the bow of his quick wittedness and shot the arrows of his sweet tongue with sentimental attachment, and on hearing these words with his ears, Nand lost all his doubtful thinking, just as a sparrow gets freedom frorm the noose. Krishna's talk, like a cloud of knowledge had flown away the storm of love and affection, which had sprung up in the heart of Nand. (343)

So accepting the advice of Krishna, Nand called all the milkmaids' children and asked all the fellow beings to arrange for the worship of cows and brahmins by providing them with food. Then he said that he had first understood this whole philosophy himself and then had asked them to follow this path of knowlege. The Lord who had given them the source of life, their very existence, should just be meditated upon, the Master of the three worlds. (344)

Then, taking permission of Nand, the Master of Brij, the milkmaids' children got up and went away to their homes. They had prepared rice, sandal wood, essence, pudding and lamps for their worship. All of them, alongwith their families and with beating of drums proceeded towards the mountain. Nand left alongwith Jasodha and Sri Krishna also accompanied by Balram followed them. (345)

When Nand alongwith the family reached near the mountain, there they grazed the cows on grass and gave rice and milk pudding to the brahmins as food. Sri Krishna was serving them by himself so all the milkmaid's children felt relieved in mind. The small children were taken on a chariot, and a new miracle was performed on leaving. (346)

Sri Krishna thought of a miracle, and converted one child into the form of beautiful mountain. The poet Saim has stated, that the boy in the form of a mountain was placed on the top of the mountain where no one could reach there. That form was practically eating the food offered, but no one could make it out (know it), only Lord Krishna knew about it. Whosoever saw it, was almost confused (knowing not what was happening). Then . .k Krishna laughed and said that (to the milkmaids' children) their food was being consumed by the mountain (in very sweet words). O people of the world! You could see with your own eyes! But when the children heard this story from Sri Krishna himself, then all of them were confounded. But when Kanha bestowed on them the heavenly eyes, then they got the insight into the whole thing (being hawks they swooped on the bird of knowledge). (348)

All the residents of Brij town then saluted Krishna with folded hands millions of times and all forgot about Indra (god) and were immersed in the Krishna spell. Those, who were asleep in the sleep of maya (worldly faslehood) but had been awakened from their slumber of ignorance, with the knowlege provided by Sri Krishna. (349)

Thus the destroyer of all sins, Krishna, laughed and said, "Let us all go to our homes." Then all left for their homes including Nand, Balram and Jasodha alongwith Krishna, who was free from all sins. When they did not propitiate the god Indra, then the guardian of Brij, Indra got annoyed with them. This thing had been mentioned in the Vedas also that Sri Krishna through some deception, had managed to get Jarasandh killed by Bhim. (350)

That Krishna who had fought against Bhumasur and got sixteen thousand women folk released from his custody, who had during Sat-Yuga demolished all forts of demon Mur like glass bangles, who was the creator of the world, and was the sustainer of all during various Yugas, who was the king of Lanka; against such a Master (Krishna), the (god) Indra, who was having a maligned mind (wisdom) and filled with extreme egoism (pride) developed a great quarrel and enmity. Thus Indra, annoyed with the milkmen and losing his patience against them, was filled with wrathfulness and told the great collection of clouds to arrange for such a downpour of rain on Brij-town, filled with great strength, so that not a single milkman could escape alive from your fury, and kill all of those milkmen, including their sisters, brothers, sons, grandsons and uncles. (352)

Taking the orders of Indra, all the clouds collected together in stregth and they organised an attack on Brij town in the form of a downpour and gathering strength from all the ten directions, encircled the township (of Brij). So all the clouds filled with wrath and water, started on their mission of killing the guardians of calves (milkmen). So these clouds, leaving behind their sons and womenfolk, left for their mission, as ordered by king of gods, Indra. (353)

Now he had assumed the form of Kanha, who had once assumed the form of a great fish to kill sankhasur in the ocean who had taken the form of a great tortoise under the churner of the gods and demons at the time of churning the great oceans, which was built of the mountain sume'r and completed their task; and now grazing the calves (as Krishna) of Brij town. So (Krishna) he was going to give protection to all beings while performing his drama of worldly games. (354)

Taking orders from Indra, the clouds had surrounded the Brij land and all the clouds getting together started thundering. The lightning was flashing, just as Ravana's drums were roaming and beating loudly against the forces of Rama. Hearing the thunder of clouds the milkmen strarted running (helter and shelter) all around in panic, and came running towards Krishna and bowed to him, requesting him for protection against this calamity. So the milkmen, due to the fear of clouds and full of panic, were crying loudly for seeking Krishna's protection, saying, "O benevolent Lord! Pray protect us from this deluge, as it has been raining continuously for the last seven days and nights. All the cows, alongwith their calves had died, and not a single cow, giving milk was left alive." They were wailing and crying before Krishna just as Heer was crying without seeing Ranjha, her spouse, for many days. (356)

Swaiyya'

When the dreaded clouds, in their fury, rained over the town of Brij, they could not be tolerated by anyone, and they pierced the Earth through the houses, so looking at all this devastation, the milkmen requested Krishna, on approaching him, that Indra was full of fury and rage against them. "O Lord! Pray protect us against this fury!." (358)

The sun could not be seen anywhere and the clouds had surrounded them from all the ten directions. They were furious with rage and roaring like a lion and were showing their teeth shining like lightning. The milkmen thus requested Krishna, O Lord! Listen to our prayers! And do as it pleases you afterwards. How could this happen to us in your presence? This is just like a jackal telling lioness in the presence of a lion, that he will kill her. (359)

"Indra, had surrounded our town by-collecting all the clouds. People call the Indra's carriage as elephant, who in his fury had broken the wings of the mountains. O Krishna! You are the creator of the world and had cut off the heads of Ravana in the form of Ram, then how could these dark clouds frighten us in your very presence?" (360)

"O Lord Krishna! You are the greatest, People worship you alone all the twenty four hours. O Lord! You have created all this vegetation after creating water fire, Earth, and mountains. O dear Krishna! When there was dearth of Knowledge in the world, you had created Vedas and Puranas. Even while churning the oceans, you alone had distributed the nectar among the gods and demons by assuming the form of Mehini. (361)

Then the milkmen said, "O Krishna! Apart from you, we have no other support. May you throw away these clouds by splitting them apart, just as you had, during childhood, in a rage, you had cut into pieces Gadasur (demon); we are totally frightened to see these dreaded clouds. "O Kanha! Like a covering of skin, may you cast away the milkmen's fear, like cold." (362)

With the permission of Indra, the dark clouds from all four sides were covering the sky, and with a fury in mind, they were showing their strentgth on the Brij town, the lightning was flashing immensely and rain showers were falling like arrows. So the milkmen were saying that they had committed some mistake, as such they were being frightened by the thundering clouds. (363)

That day it caused havoc, so due to their fear at heart all the milkmen were crying and complaining to Krishna. "Indra had wrought havoc with vengeance on us, as such the clouds were causing heavy rainfall on Brij town." O Kahna! You had eaten his food, so he is furious with rage and intends to kill residents of Brij. O Protector! Pray, protect us also as you are the saviour of the whole world." (364)

O Lord! May you cast away these clouds from Brij Town through your benevolence. Due to Indra's wrath, we have experienced heavy rainfall during the last seven days. So brother Balram, furious with rage, got up for protection of these milkmen's children, and the strenght of clouds got faded, so the milkmen were elated in their mind. (365)

Then Sri Krishna, hearing the prayers of the milkmen, accepted them as his own, and then Krishna got up to destroy the clouds, as he was the creator of the whole universe. The beauty of this scene has been related by the poet that he thought to himself as if a lion had come with opened mouth on seeing a deer. (366)

Then Lord Krishna, with a marshal spirit, started for the destruction of the clouds, the Lord, who had appeared in the form of Ram during Treta Yug and had killed Ravana in a great battle, and in Doapar Yug, had killed seven bulls with rage in Ayodhya in one go, for the sake of marrying a woman. The same Lord (Krishna), for the protection of milkmen and cows and the destruction of those clouds, moved like an intoxicated elephant from there. (367)

Krishna got enraged and for the protection of milkmen, he pulled up a huge mountain and lifted it in his hand. But for lifting the mountain, Sri Krishna did not have to use any force of the body. It appeared as if the mountain lay on his hand before hand. The poet Siam has stated, that Indra could not harm the milkmen any more. Finally, he felt ashamed of himself and with a downcast face, he walked away to his home, and this episode became well-known throughout the world. (368)

Nand's son, Krishna was a great healer with soothing effect, Indra's enemy and giving him pain and possessing great wisdom, whose countenance was more beautiful than moon's light. The poet Siam has stated that Narad even worshipped Him; He casts away the sufferings of mendicants including their laziness. He was furious with rage and lifted the mountain even. The clouds could do no harm to them at all, so they went back home in a repentant mood. (369)

Kanha had pulled out the mountain and lifted it up in hand and not a drop of water fell on him. Then Kanha laughed and said, "What is the value of Indra as compared to me?" I have killed the demons Madh and Kaitab whereas the proud Indra wanted to kill me even. Whatever the Lord said to milkmen, became known throughout the world. (370)

When Sri Krishna, for the protection of milkmen, had got annoyed with Indra, then he stood underneath the mountain, furious with rage, just as a lion had charged his posture with rage. Just as the god death, at the end of Yugas, pierces a dagger in the breast of human beings, or just as at doomsday the life of beings comes to an end, in the same manner all the clouds had disappeared. (371)

Krishna, who had protected all the milkmen, being enraged against Indra, against destruction, who had gulped all the demons like a morsel, had destroyed all the clouds in a moment with a miracle, without the shooting of a single arrow, he had made the enemies to take to their heels. In the same manner, for protecting the milkmen, Indra had rolled back all the clouds., (it seemed). (372)

When the mountain was uprooted and the (clusters) lines of clouds had been rolled back, then all thought to themselves that Krishna was short statured whereas the mountain was huge. He is the only one, who was the killer of demons, the bestower of all comforts and pleasures and giving new lease of life to us, so we should worship him alone and meditate on him, instead of anyone else. (373)

All the milkmen were very happy when all the clouds had been dispersed. All were saying that the Lord (Krishna) had bestowed on them the gift (bliss) of a mental relief from fear. Indra, who had attacked us with great wrathfulness, was nowhere to be seen now. Due to Krishna's might (Grace) the clouds had dispersed and now even a single cloud was not to be seen. (374)

All the milkmen were now saying that Kanha was very powerful, who had pierced through seven forts and had killed the demon called Mur. He had fought a battle in the waters (ocean) against Sankhasur in the form of a great fish (miller). He was the only creator of this world, who was pervading everywhere on the lands and oceans equally. He alone had appeared in Brij-land in the form of Krishna, who had kept himself hidden from all those mendicants engrossed in Yogic exercises. (375)

He had pierced seven forts by jumping over them and killed the demon Mur and had destroyed all the protective measures of Narkasur and killed him and had saved the elephant in distress (Gaj) (against octopus). He alone had saved the honour of Daropadi and had granted Salvation to Ahlia in the form of a stone, with the touch of his feet. He alone, being the son of Nand, had saved the Brij town against the wrath of Indra and his clouds. (376)

This Krishna was so powerful as to throw away the army of Indra and had killed many demons. All the people worship him and meditate upon him, and whose brother Balram was also a great warrior. It is same Kanha, whose getting enraged had helped the milkmen and all their sufferings had ended in a moment. Even Brahma was praising the same Kanha so we all should worship Kanha considering him as the Lord (Krishna) of mankind. (377)

When Krishna had lifted the great mountain, then Indra, feeling ashamed of himself, had slipped away quietly. The same Krishna had appeared in the town of Brij, who had earlier in Treta Yug, appeared in the form of Ram Chander, the great warrior and had taken the form of a small being for showing his miracles again and he alone had killed Pootna by pulling away her breast in a moment just as sins get cast away by repeating Lord's True Name. Now Kanha had appeared in Brij-land and had cast away the sufferings of milkmen. On his birth alone, the saints had been afforded all comforts and pleasures and the sufferings inflicted by the demons on them had been mitigated with the mention of his name alone. He is the only creator of the world, who had given the Kingdom of Netherlands to king Bal, and the Kingdom of heavens to Indra. By meditating on his (Krishna's) Name alone, all the physical sufferings of anyone could be cast away. (379)

Now the mighty Krishna had appeared (on Earth) who had killed the wicked Pootna sent by King Kans; he had killed the enemy called Trinavarat, when he was only six days old. (Krishna) All meditate on his Name only, and all the milkmen were saying that he (Kanha) was very stubborn, and had dispersed the great army of clouds in a moment. (380)

The milkmen were saying, that if one were to worship Krishna in one's mind (meditation) then all the sufferings of his saints would be cast away. He has appeared in the form of a powerful person, and no one could afford to oppose him even for a little while. The poet Siam had stated that he was the great Lord, and all were worshipping him. Whosoever had remembered him (worshipped him) for a moment in their hearts, had been bestowed with Salvation. (381)

The clouds had gone back (home) feeling repentant while the milkmen felt delighted in mind. All the milkmen then came back to their homes together, and stood there. They told the women folk that this Kanha, getting furious with rage, had turned away Indra in no time. We have now realised in him the True Lord (bhagwan) who had cast away all their sufferings. When (Indra) the master of the populace, had, in his fury, brought the clouds full of water, in the form of an army, over the Brij-town, it was Krishna who had lifted a mountain in hand and stood against Indra like a rock, without recognizing him as a great power. The poet Siam has described the beauty of this scene as a warrior with a shield in hand, opposes the onslaught of arrows without any fear (standing like a rock). (383)

The milkmen were saying that by remembering this Lord one could cast away all the sufferings (like a saint) He had been born in the world as a powerful person and no one could afford to stand against him for a moment. He alone destroys everyone afterwards. The poet-siam had stated that the Lord was the greatest. The person, who would worship him even for a while with full concentration could attain Salvation. (384)

Kanha was a great warrior who had destroyed Indra's army (of clouds) in a moment just as Shiva being enraged, had killled the demon Jalandhar or Chandi had completely annihilated the armies of Chand-Mund. This Indra went back home repenting, losing all his prestige. Sri Krishna had dispersed the clouds, just as an ascetic turns away the onslaughts of worldly love. (385)

The Lord (Krishna) had, getting enraged, destroyed the clouds and had saved the elephant in the waters. With his touch, the stone like aihlya had attained Salvation, and who had protected the honour of Daropadi, who was rendered helpless. All the milkmen were saying, "Whoever tried to behave like an enemy towards him, he also behaved in the same manner. But whosoever behaves as his disciple (slave) with love, gets a similar friendly treatment from him. (386)

Krishna did not bother about the army of clouds, though Indra had become furious with rage, but it had no effect on him. The Lord, who is worshipped by the whole world cannot be opposed with force of strength by anybody. So with a bowed head, and feeling quite depressed at heart, Indra had walked quietly towards his abode. (387)

When Kahna had dispersed the army of clouds, then Indra had gone back with repentance. Even though Indra, through his fury, had wrought havoc over Brij town with heavy showers, but Kahna had not attached any importance to it. The beauty of this scene has been praised by the poet Siam saying that Indra had gone back dejected and repenting just as a snake feels completely worthless on the loss of his mani (jewel). (388)

The Lord, whose secrets are not known to any muni (ascetic), is worshipped by everyone, and the person who worships Him, is also the Lord Himself. he alone had bestowed the Kingdom of the netherlands to the King Bal. The poet Siam has stated that He alone had created and established, the Earth in position. All the milkmen were also saying that the mighty Krishna would soon kill all the enemies in a few days. Infact, Krishna had taken this form only for destroying all the enemies or Sinners. (389)

Even Brahma had stolen the group of milkmaids' children (kidnapped) in a decietful manner and then Krishna, for the sake of a miracle, had also hidden them in a cave of the mountain. So Krishna, without resorting to any wrathful action, thought of a miracle to solve this problem; so in a moment Krishna had created a complete group of milkmen's children alongwith calves (of the same shape). Now Kahna had supported the mountain and placed it on his hand, and then brought all the milkmaid's children undernealth it. He had also killed in a moment all the demons like Pootna, Bakasur, Gadasur, and Trinavarat like warriors. He alone had overpowered the Cobra Kali in a moment, so we should not forget such a Lord anytime. So far all the saints have heard the episode of Krishna, now let us hear another episode. (391)

The milkmen told Nand

Swiayya

All the milkmen, describing Kahna's doings, said to Nand, Krishna had killed the demons Aghasur and Trinavarat by flying into the sky, then he had killed Pootna and now had given the gift of fearlessness to the milkmen. O Master! Even if someone were to perform various efforts (millions of) even then one carrot be blessed with such a powerful son!" (392)

"O Master! Listen to us all milkmen. All men going to the battle-field meditate on him. Even all the munis (ascetics) including Shiva meditate on him and even weaklings and needy persons meditate on him. All the womenfolk worship him, and all the householders also meditate on him. We have realised without any doubt and with fulll faith that he is the creator of the world. This is a fundamental truth and there is no doubt about it at all. (393)

All the milkmen were saying that the Lord (Sri Krishna) had himself taken birth, who had killed Pootna. He alone had bestowed the Kingdom (of Lanka) to Vibhushan and had killed Ravana, being furious with rage. He alone had torn open the breast of Hirnakush and thus protected the saint Prahlad. O Nand! Listen to us, he alone had saved Indra and our lives even." (394)

"The Lord, who is the creator of the whole world, is Krishna himself and is performing all these miracles (gameplay) in Brij town. He is the Lord, bestowing his blessings to his disciples, and is casting away the sufferings of the saints." He alone had saved the honour of Sita and he alone had protected the honour and prestige of Daropadi. The milkmen said, "O Master! Listen Krishna is very powerful and a stubborn warrior." (395)

Many days had elapsed after the episode of lifting, the mountain, Krishna again went to the jungle alongwith the calves, and they were quitely grazing grass while the Lord (Krishna) was very happy in his heart. He picked up his flute with great joy and love and started playing on it. All the womenfolk of heavens get enamoured by listening to the flute and anyone who heard its sound, would get endeared to it. (396)

The same Lord, who had killed Bali in no time and had destroyed the army of Ravana in a moment and had given the kingdom to Vibhushan, handing over Lanka to him. He had killed the demon Mur, and had killed Kumbhkaran and also the enemy of the elephant had been killed by him. The same Lord, who had saved Sita from her sufferings (of separation) and now to protect the cows of Brij-township was performing various miracles (in the form of Krishna)". (397)

The same Krishna, having slept on top of Sheshnag with one thousand fangs, and performed many miracles in the ocean; he alone had created the enmity between the gods and demons, and he alone, in the form of Krishna was now engaged in various miracles in the Brij township. (398)

The Lord, who had got warriors like Daroyodhan killed in the battle-field and the same Krishna was expert in waging war among the kings with protective covering; he alone could destroy the world by arming himself with weapons and he alone was playing his role among the milkmen and the cows. Just as fire flames were eovered with smoke, similarly being a Kashatriya he is being called a milkman (as a part of his game-plan). (399)

(The Lord), Who had fought alone against (demons) Madh and Ketab and had given the kingdom of heavens to Indra; who had killed kumbhkaran and in no time had killed even Ravana; who had bestowed the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhushan and taking back Sita with great joy and bliss had started back for Ayoudhya; He had taken birth in the Brij town now for destroying the sinners and oppressors (as Krishna). (400)

When the milkmen were praising Krishna like this, then the master of milkmen Nand, told him that "Muni Garg had told them already about the power of Krishna and now we find his words were true. The Pandit (Muni) had said that Basudev's son had been given to him from the heavens as a great blessing and honour. Infact whosover had come forward to kill Krishna, had been destroyed and had lost his life. (401)

Now the episode of Indra's visit to meet Krishna and his prayers begins.

Swaiyya

One day when Krishna had gone to the forest, Indra had come to meet Krishna, having given up his egoism and hanghtiness. He came and bowed at Krishna's feet, requesting for his pardon to please Krishna. Indra said, "O Lord! I had committed a sin and had not relaized your greatness or secrets." (402)

Indra then again said, "O lord-Sublime! You are the creator of this Universe, who had created all the beings. You were the killer of demon Mur, the enemy of Ravana in the form of Rama, and the master of the womenfolk of Bhursila town. (You are the king of all the gods, who was reponsible for alleviating the sufferings of all the saints, If someone were to be rude to you or dishonours you, gets destroyed by you in no time." (403)

When Indra was praising Krishna like this, the cow kamdhein came towards Krishna, and she also praised Krishna in many ways. The poet Siam has stated, that this was a great honour (for Krishna). While singing the praises of Krishna, another godly princess came near Krishna. She told her master, Indra, "You should praise Krishna as much as possible, as I would like to hear his praises, which is very pleasing to me." (404)

All the gods, leaving heavens had come down to Brij-town to pay their obeisance at the lotus-feet of Krishna. Some of the gods were touching the lotus-feet of Krishna, some of them were worshipping him, and some were dancing, while some others were singing songs in praise of Krishna with full attention (concentration), some were bringing sandal wood and burning incense for his worship in their hands. Thus it was apparent that the Lord had killed all the demons, and once again established the kingdom of gods over the world. (405)

Couplet

All the gods, including Indra, had got together, abjuring their egoism (pride), and were singing praises of Krishna and saying words of approbation in honour of Krishna. (406)

Kabit

Krishna and Balram appeared as the ships of love and humility (source of honour), who were assuming the form of clouds, with their beauty of water-laden form. They were shining like fountains of gentleness, full of all virtues and were casting away the afflictions of the suffering humanity with their beautiful and playful eyes (agile). Krishna was a godly person, who wants to destroy the oppressors and enemies (of humanity), and bring solace to the saintly persons. He was the sustainer of the world, bestowing Salvation to them, on whose sight alone, all the oppressors and enemies were feeling jealous in their hearts (burning within). (407)

Swaiyya'

Later all the gods, paying their respects (obeisance) to Krishna, all the gods went back to heavens (went home). Now they were calling Krishna as gobind, and all the gods were feeling blissful in their hearts. In the meantime on the approach of night, Krishna also came back home from the forest. On the dawn of day, he was engaged in other adventures of the world as he had come to Earth for perceiving the worldly drama of the Lord. (408)

Here the chapter of Indra's begging pardon from Krishna (for his sins) from the episode of Krishna's Incarnation in the Bachhittar Natak Granth is completed.

Swaiyya'

Baba Nand had gone to the river Jamuna one night of second day of moon (phases of moon). As he went into the waters of Jamna for taking bath, then the elephants of (god) varuna got together in great rage and caught hold of Nand. They brought him to Varuna in a bound condition (tied down) and without realising the power of Krishna, the elephants was trumpeting in great pride. When Nand was brought into the presence of Varuna, the (god) Varuna recognised Nand immediately. (409)

Without the presence of Nand in the town, Brij became lifeless (desolate) so all the milkmen went to Krishna, and bowed to him. After paying their respects, Then the wife (Jasodha) of Nand, alongwith other milkmen came to Krishna and with their prayers they had enamoured Krishna (pleased him). Jasodha said, "My spouse had got up and gone for a bath (to Jamuna) but had not returned so far. We have tried all our efforts, but had failed to locate him." (410)

Kahna then said,

Swaiyya

The son, Sri Krishna, told to his mother Jasodha with a smile, that "I will go to bring my father. I will go upto the (seven) depths of the Netherlands and the (seven) heights of skies, wherever he has gone. I will bring him from there. Even if he were dead, and had gone to the land of death, (hell) I will fight with all ferocity with the weapons and I will bring back Nand to meet you (o mother!). If he had gone and mingled with someone else. I will not allow him to go. (411)

When the milkmen had gone to their houses, then Krishna said with a smile, "I will meet the master of milkmen (Nand) and take it as a truth and not a lie from me. So all the doubts in the minds of the milkmen alongwith its painful suffering in their minds was alleviated by the remarks of Krishna. So all of them had peace of mind leaving aside their restlessness. (412)

In the morning at dawn itself, Krishna entered the waters of Jamuna, and went to (the god) Varuna. As soon as Krishna stood near Varuna, he fell at the feet of Krishna (the Master of Rivers) and begged for his pardon. Then he said, "My slaves have unknowingly caught hold of your father and tied him down and they were repenting and saying, "O Krishna! Pray pardon my sin; as we could not follow your secret move." (413)

It is our great good fortune that we have perceived the Lord Himself today, who had with pb leasure handed over the kingdom to Vibhushan and had killed Ravana being enraged and today, who had killed the demons Mur and Agharsur with his might and had, through deceit, deceived the King Bal, who had assuming the form of her spouse, had spoiled the honour and chastity of Jalandhar's wife, so it is our good fortune to meet you." (414)

So Varuna, paying respects to Krishna, arranged to send Nand alongwith him, and said, "It is our good fortune, that this episode will always be mentioned in all times to come, and included in the books of learning." (415)

Taking his father alongwith him, Sri Krishna, in a blissful mood, left for his home town. People from the Brij town met them on the out skirts and were bowing to Krishna for this successful action. They paid their obeisance to Krishna many times and gave many alms (gifts) to the brahmins. When Krishna had brought back the Master of Brij town (Nand) and got him in touch with the people, then they said that "Kahna was truly the creator of the world." (416)

Then Nand said :

Swaiyya'

When Nand came out of the river waters, he said, "Kahna was truly the creator of the Universe." He alone had given the Kingdom (of Lanka) to Vibhishan, being pleased with him, and had killed many enemies like Ravana. Varuna's (god) slaves had tied me down, but Krishna had got me released from them. So all (people) should consider him as the creator of the world and not an ordinary child. (417)

All the milkmen considered this scecret in their minds and felt that Krishna alone was the Lord himself. So they said, that "They would like to visit the heavens". The beauty of this scene, alongwith its praise and greatness, the poet has expressed this as such. "On gaining the true scholarly knowledge, the gold-stone (Paras) like Krishna had converted the iron like milkmen into gold itself (blessed then with Salvation). (418)

The Lord, who had known the secret of all this, performed another miracle knowing the inner feelings. When the night appreached and all had almost gone to sleep, when all their sufferings, at heart, had disappeared by meditating on the Lord's Name, and all were dreaming. That particular dream was viewed by both men and women. There was a beautiful place, with no other comparison in beauty. (419)

If you find any errors of omission or commission, then you could rectify it." (440)

Now the episode of Amorous pastime begins
Swaiyya'

Whe the month of Kartik began (winter season started), then the great dramatist, Kahna, who was a great charmer, thought of many game plays in the company of milkmaids children. All the sins of the devilish mind are cast away with a touch of his lotus-feet. He had thought of an idea (in mind) that by having a pastime with the womenfolk, the vice of sexual desires could be curbed. (441)

Krishna, whose countenance was like the moon, with his eyes like the petals of the lotus flower and his eye brows like a bow and eye lashes like the arrowsl and his glance would cast away all the sufferings of the person (when he casts his glance). The afflictions of the saints were cast away (like the rust) with the arrows of his quick glance, sharpened with his sexy eyes. This beauty is explained by the poet Siam as the eyes of Krishna were so charming as the petals of the lotus get upright with the support (head of) of the moon (petal beauty against the moonlight). (442)

Kahna was like a hunter and his eye lashes were like the cover (safety) and the beauty of his side glances was like the shooting of arrows; and Kahna was standing in the jungle with a saffron coloured robe on the body and head, and was moving very slowly and cautiously as if a hunter was moving very slowly and cautiously being trained as a hunter and his bearing (form) was like a hunter and the yellow piece of cloth on the shoulders was like a net for enticing the mind (for catching a shikar). (443)

He was standing in the jungle as during the Treta Yuga, the spouse of Sita (Ram) was standing. For his game play in the (river) Jamuna, he had applied the sandal wood (by rubbing on stone) on his forehead. With his charming glance he had enamoured the hearts of all milkmaids children with the bait of his charming glance. The poet siam has stated that the Lord had assumed this form for enjoying fun and frolic. (444)

He possessed deer-like eyes, whose face was charming like the moonlight, with a delicate waist of a tiger, and the beauty of his frame (body) was shining like gold. His thighs were strong like the iron vessel (for pounding) and the legs were straight like an arrow. The beauty of Kahna, with description of each limb was almost indescribable, as his beauty was beyond words. (445)

His appearance (face) was like the moon, and he had sung songs of joy in the forest, being delighted. When the women-folk of Brij town heard with their ears, the beautiful tunes of his songs and it appealed to their hearts, then all of them rushed to meet Kahna. It appeared as if to win over the young deer-like youthful beauties, Kahna had started beating the drum likely (grandeur) to attract the attention of deer like damsels. (446)

The poet Siam has stated that "The flute, near the lips of Kahna, was looking beautiful while the womenfolk of Brij town came running towards him without having any shame or without caring for their face. They were completely in the control of Kahna (due to love) having seen his beautiful form and being enamoured with him, were shouting, "Kahna Kahna". Some had fallen unconscious while some of them were singing songs of his praise and some others were madly in love with him, and fully involved in their own body. (447)

On hearing the tunes of his flute, all the damsels of Brij town, left immediately to meet him (Krishna). All were engrossed in the love of Krishna, having seen the beautiful eyes of Krishna. They had left their homes like the deer, just as the deer rushes out on hearing the sound of beating drums and the milkmen could not stop them from running after Kahna. Thus they managed to reach near Krishna just as a friend gains full consciousness finding herself near her girl-friend and were full of confidence. (448)

The milkmaids came from all the ten directions, being engrossed in the love of Krishna (madly in love). On perceiving the moon like beautiful countenance of Sri Krishna, they were killed with sexual desires in their hearts like the bird chakor (partridge). Then on seeing the perfect beautiful face of Krishna, their (captivating) amorous eyes were fixed on securing his love like a deceit. The poet Siam has stated that Kahna was getting elated on seeing them just as a male deer feels happy on seeing a female deer. (449)

Those damsels could not be prevented from coming there by the milkmen and were getting restless in listening to the tunes of his flute. They had forgotten about their household chores even just as the wisdom of a Yogi crosses the barriers of Indra's land (of beauty). They were keen to perceive the face of Krishna, an embodiment of sexual desires and game play and having thrown away their robes (like naked mendicants) they had lost all sense to safeguard honour (or public slander) to meet him. When they went near Krishna, then he absorbed all the milkmaids in his group. At that time their clothes (on the body) and oranments had fallen away from them and their bangles were broken. The poet Siam has stated that all the milkmaids, on seeing Krishna's beauty, all the milkmaids were one with Sri Krishna (become thick friends) as if all of them, casting away any hesitation or bashfulness joined with Krishna as of one clan, professing all love and affection for him. (451)

The milkmaids had forgotten about their household responsiblities and were enamoured with his love alone, forming his associates. All of them, with lustful eye brows, short statured (some), having charming eye lashes, were all filled with sexual desires and love for Kahna. Having given up all other pleasures and attachments, they had developed love for Kahna (god) immensely and in a big way. Their hearts were throbbing with Kahna's love just as gold ornaments were studded with diamond pieces with selection choice beautifully. (452)

The most beautiful milk-maids of Brij-town were watching Kahna's beauty with interest, and they possessed deer like eyes and were looking as beautiful as the eyes of a fish. These (womenfolk) were looking glorious in Brij land as if they had assumed this form of beauty for having fun and frolic. The Lord alone was watching their beauty and they were showing their virtuous beauty alone. (453)

The poet Siam has stated that the eyes of these milkmaids with antimony (put therein) were looking very charming, as if the beauty of the lotus flowers was being exhibited by them and they were as sharp as the arrows fixed in a bow. It appeared as if Brahma (god) had moulded their body with steady and calm posture, and were looking attractive with sensuous charm. They were enamouring the hearts of Yogis (mendicents), and they were at the very source of their might or occult powers. (454)

That such a Kahna was standing midst the milkmaids, whose greatness or limits could not be described by the Munis (asceties), and millions of people have been trying to praise his grandeur for years, but could not realise or appreciate his inner beauty with their eyes. Many warriors had laid down their lives in the battle field to realise his greatness but none so far had been successful. The same Lord was now engaged in enjoying the worldly pleasures and fun and frolic amidst the women-folk of Brij-town (to keep his greatness a secret). (455)

When all the charming demsels went towards Krishna collectively they were an embodiment of sensuous love on seeing his moon-like appearance, (being attracted towards him). Then Kahna took up his flute in hand and played on it with great emotion, so that all the milkmaids were completely mesmerised just as the deer gets enticed by hearing the beat of a special drum (of the hunter). (456)

Kahna was playing on his flute with great emotion various Ragas like Malsiri, Ramkali and Sarang and was playing jaitsri, perfect malahar and Bilawal (ragas) tunes in a loud note so that even the wind stopped its movement and even (river) Jamuna waters were forced to halt their movement (with its charm) on hearing these, tunes. Whosoever would hear his flute notes, was completely enamoured by its charm. (457)

On hearing Kahna's flute tunes, all the milkmaids would lose their conscious awareness (like mad persons); all of them would forget about their household chores, and were attracted towards Kahna's flute only (thus rushing towards him without hesitation). The poet Siam has stated that the flute had, like a cheat, deceived these maids into such a trance (that they lost all sense of worldly modesty) and like a deer were following him completely mesmerised by its flute, and were not conscious of their modest behavriour even. (458)

The poet siam has stated that all the womenfolk were simply gazing at Kahna's beauty, just as the deer would rush towards the sound of the flute tunes and would not move away (from there). All these milkmaids were dancing around alongwith Kahna, being completely engrossed in his sensuous love and had lost all sense of feminine modesty from their minds. Kahna had enamoured these milkmaids so much, just as the sandal wood gets worn out by rubbing it on a rough stone. (459)

The poet Siam has stated that the most fortunate of the maidens were laughing and gossiping with Kahna without any hesitation. Infact, they had developed sensuous love for Kahna, on perceiving his charm, who was the destroyer of all our sins. These milkmaids were so much engrossed in Kahna's love that their heart was fully enthralled at his physical beauty. Those maids, who were having true love for Kahna, had made their lives successful and worth while whereas those of them, having alone superficial love for him, had lived worthless lives (as true love alone begets Lord's love). (460)

Kahna stood there, with overlooking eyes (towards the other side) but enjoying the scene and smiling inwardly, while all the maidents of Brij enamoured with his charm, had developed great love for him, and were feeling blissful. The same Lord, who had once won over Sita from Ravana by killing such mighty warriors, was now playing such wonderful and enchanting tunes on his flute with nectar like ragas and pearl like invaluable tunes. Then Kahna told the milkmaids

• Swaiyya

The clouds had gathered (in sky) on the banks of river Jamuna, thus making it a pleasant chance for games and fun. The poet siam has stated, that Kahna said, smiling, "O girl friends! Get rid of your fear or hesitation and let us play some games. Whosoever is considered more beautiful among you, should come forward for playing with me, as I would not like to play with everyone (Tom dick and harry). Kahna, who was the destroyer of Sheshnag and his pride, said these sweet words with a smile. (462)

The poet siam has stated, "Then Kahna, who was feeling blissful in this beautiful atmosphere, told these things to the milkmaids in a jocular manner. His eyes were charming like that of a deer and his gait was so glamorous as an intoxicated elephant was moving. The milkmaids, on seeing Kahna's physical beauty, had forgotten completely about their household affairs (functions). Infact their bodies had cast away all the covering of clothes and their eyes had lost all sense of modesty or worldly shame (they were feeling attached to him in body and spirit). (463)

The same Lord, who had killed, being furious, (the demons) mur with his own hands; who had given the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhishan and had cut off the head of Ravana, being enraged, was now having fun and frolic with the milkmaids in the town of Brij and enjoying worldly pleasures with them. The poet Siam has stated that his praises were being sung in all the three worlds. (464)

Then Krishna took a bet, with a smile, with the milkmaids of Brij town saying that "All of us would jump into the river Jamuna. Then Krishna alongwith other milkmaids jumped into the waters; thus taking a deep phunge in the Jamuna, he kissed one of the women-folk suddenly. (465)

The milkmaids then told Kahna :

Swaiyya

The poet siam has stated that all the beautiful milkmaids got together and told Krishna one very skilful thing (dextrous); whose eyes were shining like the deer, having agility like the fish (in the eyes). The maids, having their bodies shining like gold, with faces like the lotus flowers, were filled with sensual pleasure and said to him, "O Protector of the helpless! Then with increased love and having peace of mind with bowed heads they addressed Krishna like helpless people with great humility. (466)

With increasing love in their hearts, the milkmaids said, "The person, who had in the Treta Yuga, become the master of the monkeys, who had killed Ravana in the battle field being furious with rage, and in his delight had handed over the kingdom of Lnaka to Vibhushan. The poet Siam has stated that "The power of one who was known throughout the world and was not kept secret from anyone was being addressed by the milkmaids with love and affection, and they had worshipped Chandika for getting his hand (love) (Krishna's hand). When the milkmaids said these loving words, then Krishna told them in an unambiguous language that "they would not get pardoned for this sin even after their death, as they had come to him after leaving their spouses at home. He said, "I am not in love with you at all, then why do you talk all these alluring things to me, in trying to convince me about your love for me?" After uttering these words, Krishna became quiet for sometime and then started playing on his flute a tune of Ka'fi (couplet) metres. (468)

Then Kahna told the milkmaids -

Swaiyya'

The poet Siam has stated that when Krishna replied to the beautiful milkmaids with a smile, they did not go back home agreeing to his verdict, as they had been enamoured completely on seeing the Lord's appearance (contenance). That time Krishna, taking his flute in the hands, started playing his flute in Ragas (in different tunes). It appeared as if Krishna had applied salt to the wounds of the milkmaids (which was very painful). (469)

Just as a male deer is seen among a flock of female deer, in the same manner Krishna was looking glorious in the crowd of milkmaids. The poet Siam has stated that he was looking so praiseworthy, by perceiving whom an enemy would get elated, without having any rancour in the heart. Such a Kahna, whom the deer would come running to meet without having any fear of him, was now moving around in the jungle. Whosoever perceived Kahna, would be completely enamoured with his charm. Then the milkmaids told Krishna -

Swaiyya'

The milkmaids then told Krishna, whose sweet words were like the nectar, which would cast away the anxiety from the minds of saints, the milkmaids started talking to such a sweet tongued Krishna saying, "O Kahna! After leaving our spouses, now we are completely enticed by your love, and the body is fully engrossed in enjoying sensuous pleasure in your company only, and such sexual desires cannot be curbed by us any more. (471)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

When Krishna felt satisfied that these milkmaids were fully engrossed in his love, then Krishna also ignored any hesitation in his mind about their sincerity of love and then enjoyed sexual pleasures with them (having physical relationship). Thus Krishna, having enjoyed sensuous pleasures with them satisfied their hunger for his love, thus curbing the flame of love within them. The poet Siam has said, it is not clear from this strange miracle whether Kahna had won over the milkmaids or they had enamoured Kahna with their love. (472)

The Lord, who had assumed the form of Rama in Treat Yuga (age of Treta), having behaved with such a strength of character, who was the killer of the enemies, and was sustaining his saints by all means; the same Lord had appeared in Doapar Yuga in the form of Krishna (Kahna), who had killed the despots and who was wearing yellow robes now. The same Krishna was enjoying the company of milkmaids with a simle, alongwith senxual pleasure, in the land of Brij. (473)

Krishna was playing on his flute Ragas Malsri and Ramkali alongwith perfect Malhar and Bilwal tunes with a high note. By taking the flute in hand, Kahna was playing his flute as it pleaseed him, and with the notes produced from the flute, even the wind would stop blowing, even Jamuna would stop its flow, and whosoever hears its tunes, gets enamoured. (474)

Kahna was playing on his flute with such beautiful tunes, that the milkmaids would get elated with its tunes, as the Ragas Malhar and Bilwal would create such a sensatron that all the demsels of holy and evil spirits were all mesmerised with its (flute) tunes and even the female deer would, leaving the company of male deer, come running towards him. Krishna had such an expertise in playing the flute, as if all the Ragas were made apparent by the various tunes. (475)

On hearing the flute notes, all the milkmaids were captivated towards it so that they would bear with a smile whatever their people at home would say against them (in blemish) and they would come running towards Kahna. The poet-Siam has said in their praise, that it appeared all snakes were mesmerised in their great numbers by seeing the red-coloured worms (and start moving). (476)

The same Lord (Krishna), who had earlier handed over the Kingdom of Lanka to Vibhushan in appreciation (of his services), and had tortured Ravana being furious with rage (to death), and assuming the form of wind had dispersed the huge cluster of clouds of the demons in a moment (and destroyed them) and had killed the great demon Mur by going through a narrow path and was now having sensuous fun and frolic with the milkmaids. (477)

The same Kahna, whom the whole world was keen to perceive, was playing his games of merriment with the milkmaids. He was the master (Lord) of the whole Universe, and the greatest support of their very lives (existence); who had been infuriated with rage, and assuming the form of Rama, fought against Ravana, like a great warrier. Now the same Krishna had developed love for the milkmaids for fun and enjoyment. (478)

Couplet

When the milkmaids had behaved like ordinary human beings towards Krishna (having sensual pleasure with him) then all the milkmaids had felt within themselves that they had (under their control) controlled the Lord Himself. (479)

Swaiyya'

Then suddenly Kahna disappeared from the midst of milkmaids being (away from their sight) in solitude meditation. He had gone in the celestial globe or buried himself in the Earth below and remained invisible (standing among them), but no one could understand the implications of this secret. The condition of the milkmaids (or their predicament) has been expressed by the poet Siam in these words, it appeared as if, being annoyed with the fish, the ocean had gone away (dried up) in disgust having left them in the lurch. (480)

The milkmaids had lost all their sense and were roaming around the forest like mad women. The women folk of Brij town would get up in desperation, while some others were falling down with dizziness, while some others were rushing forward. Being distressed, they were searching for Krishna and even their head (wrapped) coverings (scarf) had fallen down. They were completely lost in Krishna's thoughts and his whereabouts and in their excitement, were embracing the trees, taking them as a form of Krishna. (481)

Then leaving the embrace of trees, they would utter in despration, "Where is Nand Lal? (Nand's son) gone?

Then they were asking the various trees like chamba (fragrant flower), moulsri, banyan tree, palm tree, clove plant, creepers, and bauninia trees, about Krishna, for whom we had borne thorns in our feet and sunshine on the head, we are bowing to you and beseech you, to know about him." (482)

The Poet Siam has stated that the milkmaids were roaming, where creepers were looking glorious, or fragrant (chamba) flowers were flourishing, moulsri and poppy flowers alongwith roses were blooming. The ground was radiant with Chamba (flowers), moulsri, palm trees, cloves, creepers and beuhimia plants blooming all over, and water (fountains) brooks, and springs were overflowing with water and the land was full of greenery, fully satiated. Due to Krishna's love in that forest, the milkmaids of Brij town were saying thus on seeing those trees, "Is he hiding in this pipal or Banyan tree, in whose love we have borne the sun's heat? Has he hidden himself, since he told us as to why we had come forsaking our spouses? But we cannot remain happy at home without having a glimpse of Kahna. One damsel would be talking while the other would embrace the trees on hearing these words, as if it were Kahna. (484)

In Kahna's separation, the women folk of Brij were madly missing him and were moving around like the cranes, wailing and crying; where no food was available to eat or drink. One would fall down unconscious, while the other one would say, "having developed so much love with us, O Lord! Where have you gone?" (485)

Having used his bewitching eyes like a deer, he had enamoured all the milkmaids and we are totally engrossed in his love with our hearts, and we cannot bear his separation for a moment as such we are roaming here having left our homes. Having said these words, one of them heaved a deep sigh. Addressing the jungle the milkmaids said, " O brother forest! "Pray tell us in which direction Krishna had gone? (486)

"We have loved the same person (Krishna) who had once killed Mareech in the jungle whose slave Hanuman had burnt (set fire to) the town of Lanka and have borne the laughter of many people (condemnation)." The lotus-eyed beautiful womenfolk said, that they had been pierced with the sharp edged arrows of his eyes, so that their deer-like hearts had been enamoured (487)

Whosoever would give alms to the beggars in plenty, would have the same benefit as gained by reading Vedas; whosoever would feed the incoming guests, would earn the same reward for sure as having full faith in him; whosoever would enable us to have a glimpse of our Lord for a moment would have the benefit of our whole life (at his disposal) in the reward. (488)

The same Krishna, who had once offered (the Kingdom of) Lanka to vibhishan, and who had destroyed the hordes of demons being infuriated. The poet siam has stated, that the same Krishna had saved the honour of all saintly pesons having destroyed all the villains. The same person having developed so much love for us, had disappered (hidden) now. "O brother jungle! We would pay our obeisance at your feet, if you were to tell us in which direction Krishna had gone?" (489)

All the milkmaids were searching for Krishna in the forest, but Krishna was nowhere to be seen in the forest. Then the milkmaids thought to themselves that he minght have gone to the same place where he had left while playing the games. Then again another thought came to their mind, and they concentrated on Krishna only. The poet has described the beauty of this scene as the birds (partridges) had come back from the other side of the river having flown there (490).

Then the milkmaids, reaching that place, were trying to search for Krishna but in vain. So they were standing there bewildered as if they were looking gracious like a portrait or statue. Then the milkmaids hit upon another plan and started concentrating single minded on Kahna only. So one of them started reciting his qualities, while a second one started playing on the flute, while another one started doing mimicry. (491)

One posed as Pootna and one assumed the form of Trinavarat and one posed as Aghasur and one of them, posing as Krishna, tried to push through the demons; and then threw them down on the ground. Their mind was completely engrossed in thinking of Krishna and would not get separated for a moment from such thoughts. On seeing this situation, one is tempted to praise the scene as if one trader, to satisfy his desire for eating meat preparation, prepares a liquid preparation by boiling stones (small). (492)

The son of Vyas (Sukhdev) came to Raja Preekshit and told him a strange episode. The milkmaids, burning in the fire of separation, develop the condition of separation and were showing such dreadful scenes and producing fear psychosis (as if they were depicting the portrayal of fire of separation). But whenever they were reminded of Krishna (thinking of union with Kahna) they were seen quenching the (fire) flames of separation. (494)

One milkmaid was posing as Brikhasur, while another maid assumed the form of Bachhrasur (demons) and one posing as Brahma kidnapped the milkmaids' children. Then another, posing as Brahma, bows at Krishna's feet. Then another maid assumed the form of a crane (Bakasur) who fights with Krishna, being enraged. Thus the women folk of Brij town were playing the same game of fun, as Nand Lal (Kahna) used to play. (495)

At first the milkmaids performed all the games of fun as by Kahna and then started singing his praises. The poet Siam has stated, that they were clapping, playing on the flute, and then were doing lot of fun and frolic, and then they were reminded of the place, where Krishna used to make lot of fun with them. Then the milkmaids forgot all about Krishna and were feeling pained and distressed at his separation. (496)

All the milkmaids (wives of milkmen) had developed love of Krishna in their bodies (hearts) and on seeing his appearance (beautiful) they were completely enamoured and became fully under his spell and they fell down unconscious on the ground. The poet has depicted the beauty of this scene by comparing it with the deer (female) who falls down (dead) with the arrow striking her, being completely under the spell of the beating drum's (special type) sound. (497)

By using the arrows of the eye-lashes fixed in the bows of eye-brows, they were presenting themselves as an embodiment of embllishment, and with increased love in their hearts they were standing unmoved in front of Krishna and they would not move even a step from their position being enraged with love of Krishna. It appeared as if they had fought against the warrior, in the form of god of love and the milkmaids in the form of opposing warriors who had fallen down having laid down their lives (in the battle). (498)

On seeing the extreme love of the milkmaids, then suddenly the Lord (Krishna) appeared on the scene (by removing the hidden posture). There was so much illumination (light) on the Earth on his appearance, just as a moon like fire-work (mehtabi) illumines the whole area at night on its display. All the milkmaids were then bewildered, just as one gets astonished (startled) on seeing a dream at night. Their hearts were completely mesmerised by his presence just as a drunkard runs away from his house (rushes for having a drink). (499)

When the milkmaids perceived the proud Lord (Krishna) standing there, they rushed forward to meet him. Even the egocentric (proud) maids (due to their beauty) rushed forward on seeing Krishna just as the female deer rush to meet their mate (male deer). The poet has depicted the beauty of this scene like this; just as a (chatrik) cuckoo feels delighted (with life) on getting the rain-drop (in mouth) or a fish (out of water) jumps into water on the very sight of it. (500)

The yellow piece of cloth on the shoulder of Sri Krishna was looking glorious and his eyes were shining brilliantly like the deer's eyes. The jewel (gem) was looking gorgeous on his chest (shining beautifully) which he had been offered by the ocean as a gift (in his reverence). Kahna was moving around in the midst of milkmaids (with pride) as if there was none equal to him in the whole world, while the milkmaids of Brij-town feeling fully elated, and anyone, on seeing them, would get (started) delighted with their beauty. Kabit

The milmmaids were feeling fully delighted on listening to the talk of Krishna just as the lotus flower blossoms forth on the sight of sun at the dawn (of day), or the separated person feels happy on meeting someone, or a lover of music feels delighted with the playing of seven tunes (melodies) of Raga or a thief feels happy on saving his skin (from being caught); or a wealthy person feels happy on acquiring wealth, or a debtor feels proud on getting people's support (respect) or a great warrior feels elated at the beginning of a battle, or a recluse feels delighted being relieved of his bondage, or a suffering person gets relief being freed of his afflictions or a person having no appetite feels happy being hungry or a king feels happy at the destruction of his enemy : (the same way the milkmaids were feeling happy). (502)

Then Krishna said :

Swaiyya'

Kahna laughed and told the milkmaids, "Let us go to the banks of Jamuna and play some games. There we will have fun by splashing water on each other while swimming and you also enjoy the swim like that. By making garlands of the jungle flowers and wearing them around our necks, we will have fun and frolic with sensual pleasure. To cast away the pangs of separation, we will enjoy the love (of sexual pleasure), thus satisfying our hunger with laughter. (503)

On accepting the proposal of Sri Krishna the milkmaids rushed towards the spot. Someone was smiling within, while another maid was moving slowly in good mood while another maid was running away towards that place. The poet Siam has stated the beauty of the scene by praising their mischievous eyes, while some were getting impressed with their elephant-like gait (movement). (504)

Alongwith Sri Krishna all the milkmaids swam across the Jamuna waters and on reaching the other side, all of them encircled Sri Krishna and stood there. The poet has described the beauty of the scene like this. It appeared as if Krishna was like the full moon, and the milkmaids were looking glamorous around him like his family members. (505)

The poet Siam has stated that all the milkmaids were talking to Sri Krishna. All the beautiful womenfolk of Brij town, whose faces were resembling the moon, with deer-like eyes, whose appearance (faces) were shining like the sun in its glory, having shed all their modesty (of family), enjoying and relishing the merriment and the fun. (506)

It appeared as if Sri Krishna to enjoy the merriment and fun, with great difficulty had woven some magic spell around them, or had enticed them all into his love with some black magic (jugglery). The poet siam has described the whole affair as making a great fuss with some charm around them. Thus Sri Krishna, the benevolent Lord, had enamoured all the milkmaids into his love within no time (a moment). (507)

Then the milkmaids said :

Swaiyya'

The milkmaids asked Krishna as to where he had gone leaving them behind all alone. "You had developed great love for us and then played many games of fun and frolic with love on the banks of Jamuna with us." The poet Siam has stated that Krishna left them alone just as a traveller departs company on the way only. "You are not newcomer for us, and now you have come back to see our blooming faces and enjoy the charm of our beauty. Why so? But while our turn comes (to enjoy your company) you had gone elesewhere like a black bee. Why so?" (508)

Now the episode of the secret of clever persons begins

Swaiyya'

There is a (male) person, who develops love without any indication of love from the other side responding equally, while there is another person who makes love with the other side responding equally, 'while there is another type of person who only recognizes the love of the other side, but himself does not make any advances (of love), while there is another type of person who does not know the secret of love at all and whosoever loves him, considers him/her as his enemy. Such a person should be considered among the fools of the world, who does not know a bit even about love. Such talk of love was being engaged into by the milkmaids with Sri Krishna. (509)

The milkmaids then said :

Swaiyya'

The milkmaids were telling Krishna that if a person, having developed love for someone, then deceiving the other one (goes away); his condition could be compared to someone, who having joined another person, travel together and then suddenly leaves the companion and then comes back to loot all his belongings. Just as a killer of the traveller, kills someone travelling with him; such a person should also be considered as a proud (a deceitful person). Then the milkmaids getting frustrated said, that Krishna was also like such travellers. (510)

When the milkmaids said these words, Krishna laughed at them. Even Ganika had been relieved of all her sins by uttering the name of such a Lord; but those persons, who did not meditate on his name, were completely uprooted; whereas those families were maintained in peace who managed to recite Lord's Name. So Krishna told the milkmaids that he was engrossed badly in love with them. (511)

Saying this Sri Krishna laughed away, and went away to swim in the waters of Jamuna. It did not take him long to swim across over to the other side of Jamuna. After swimming for sometime Krishna had lot of fun and frolic with the milkmaids. This merry-making was more pleasing than the fun during holi (festival of coloured waters), marriages or betwen families of married couples (their parents) which results in lot of fun and frolic. Then Krishna said,

Swaiyya'

When the night fell, Srikrishna laughed and said, let us have some sort of game play (for fun). The white moon was looking glamorous and the faces of the milkmaids were also shining white beautifully, and let us wear the garlands of white flower. Then let us play the game of love with arms around the necks of one another, with love in the Brij town. Then whatever pangs of separation you had suffered could now be made up playing together." (513)

Sri Krishna then said, "O girls! You all play the game of amorous pastime. By holding one another's hand make a round circle and do not have any sense of modesty in mind, then I will have an amorous pasttime with you. I will dance and you also follow me and dance, having no fear in your hearts. Then have full enjoyment, casting away all your thoughts of sufferings. (514)

Then again Krishna told them like this -

O friends! Listen to my request. Feel completely blissful in your mind, so that my body and mind also blossoms forth (becomes fresh). Whatever action the friend thinks he could take as a matter of right, then one should get up to perform that action (without hesitation). One should give the gift of love to the friend, so that it should dispel all thoughts of suffering from his mind. (515)

Sri Krishna then laughed and said, "You should hear all the talk of love from me. Whatever action the friend likes to perform which suits him, one should listen to that and perform which suits him, one should listen to that and perform that function (without any hesitation). The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna then did this act of love with benevolence with all the milkmaids. If one develops love for anyone, then one should completely offer himself to that person without any reservations (one should offer his sacrifice without any reward). (516)

On hearing Sri Krishna's talk the milkmaids felt complete peace of mind (patience). The pangs of suffering in mind (due to his separation) had been cast away with his love (all the afflictions were burnt in the fire of love like straw). All the girls joined with the son of Jasodha (Sri Krishna) in enjoying the amorous game by agreeing to his proposal. The whole Earth was blossoming on seeing this amorous pastime, and all the people on the Earth or the heavens were feeling delighted. (517)

All the womenfolk of Brij town were singing songs and clapping with love (of Kahna). The poet siam also stated, that the milkmaids had agreed to Krishna's requirement with love at heart knowingly. They had learnt truly, which they had followed either from the women of the gods or from some one else. I feel that they had learnt this art of love from where Sri Krishna had learnt. (518)

There was crown of peacock's wing on Krishna's head looking gorgeous there, while in both his ears were ringlets (or tresses) shining. A necklace of rubis and pearls was looking beautiful round his neck and nothing could match its beauty. Even if an enemy were to hear its praises he would also go to watch it. The poet siam has stated that what to talk of anyone else, even the gods were getting enamoured on seeing its beauty. (519)

Sri Krishna was singing with love at heart, by enjoying the fun in the company of the milkmaids. All those present there including the birds, were feeling happy and Sri Krishna was making the milkmaids elated with love. The Lord, with all the celestial singers and mythological figures (human body with horse's head) were trying to search for, but none could find His secrets. The same (Krishna) was singing songs there. Hearing the melodious tune of his flute even the male deer were rushing towards him leaving behind their mates (female deer). (520)

Sri Krishna was playing ragas like sarang, perfect Malhar, bibha's, Bilwal and Gouri ragas (on flute). Even the women folk of heavens (god's companions) were rushing towards him, leaving behind their head covers (modesty) on hearing the tunes, and the milkmaids were madly in love with his flute (tunes), and the male deer alongwith mates were running towards him on hearing the flute. (521)

Some milkmaids were dancing, another was singing songs in joy while a third one was clapping to show her inner feelings of happiness. Infact, all of them were engaged in pleasing their beloved Krishna while making fun and playing games. The poet siam has stated that all the milkmaids, having left their town during the beautiful moonlight of monsoon period and getting together, were playing games of love and fun at that beautiful place. (522)

The poet siam has stated that all the milkmaids, getting together, were playing games (of fun and frolic) at that beautiful place. It appeared as if Brahma had himself created that atmosphere of fun in the heavenly place of gods, and the birds were feeling happy on seeing this scene, while the deer were enticed so much that they forgot to pertake of their food even, having given it up. What to talk of others, even Krishna himself was enamoured and dodged by this illusion (and was fully engrossed in the play). (523)

From one side Krishna appeared alongwith his friends, while from the other side the whole group of milkmaids came forward. The poet siam has stated that there followed an atmosphere of love, fun and frolic between them. Even Brahma could not make out the extent of this play nor Narad could imagine the charm of this scene of love. Infact, Sri Krishna was looking gorgeous and charming among the group of milkmaids just as a (male) deer looks beautiful among a herd of (female) deer. (524)

On one side Krishna was singing songs alongwith his mates, while on the other side, all the damsels were singing. It appeared as if during the month of phalgun (Feb.-March) the bird koel was chirruping and kooing (singing) on the mango grooves. They were all singing songs on the banks of the river, which pleased them most. The stars and the gods were watching the scene with wide open eyes, while their spouses were also coming for watching the frun. (525)

Sri Krishna had organised the drama (amorous pastime) in a big way like Vishnu. The poet has stated that in that gameplay love was being enjoyed like gold (ornaments). Even Brahma, having tried his hand for millions of years in vain, could never develop such a beautiful scene (of gameplay). It appeared as if Sri Krishna was studded like a gem in the hearts of the golden bodies of the milkmaids. (526)

Just as the fish makes fun and frolic in water, similarly the milkmaids were fondling with Krishna; just as people play the game of coloured waters (holi), the same way the milkmaids were making fun. The milkmaids were singing song of joy just as the koel (black nightingale) sings mirthfully. The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids were enjoying the love of Sri Krishna with great emotion. Sri Krishna had talked to them (milkmaids) about the true love, (worldly) was also not less important. The poet siam has stated that Krishna had told the milkmaids, "My gameplay with you had been very pleasing and saying this Sri Krishna started laughing, which showed the beauty of his shining teeth, and it appeared as if lightning was shining among the dark black clouds in the monsoon period (of sawan month). (528)

The milkmaids filled with sexual desires said, "O Nand Lal! Come and let us enjoy fun and frolic without having any hesitation in mind. With mischievous eyes, and smiling, they looked at Krishna with their eye-brows twisted (looked at Krishna) in such a manner, whose beauty of this scene has been stated by the poet as if the milkmaids had woven a noose of their sensual love around the neck of Krishna. (529)

The poet siam has stated that Krishna was playing his sporting game among the milkmaids, which is worthy of all praise (worth our sacrifice) and they were also playing the amorous games with sensual desires at heart. It appeared as if they had been mesmerised into his sensual love (had developed sensual love). On Brij-land, on the banks of river, a beautiful atmosphere (of love) had been created, which had resulted in the whole populace of the Earth being very much pleased and delighted and the (godly place) gods in heavens were equally enjoying the fun. One of the milkmaids was singing songs, while another one was dancing and with the clapping of the milkmaids a beautiful sound like the tinkling bells was being provided. Sri Krishna was looking most glamorous among the group of milkmaids just as a (male) deer in the herd of deer (famale) looks grand. The poet has stated that Sri Krishna was also dancing with great love, whose glamour had spread all over the place. On perceiving the mode of their singing songs, the great cluster of celestial musicians were trying to imitate, and seeing their dancing technique the spouses of gods even feeling (ashamed) belittled. (531)

The poet siam has stated that Krishna had organised this amorous pastime to enjoy the love at gameplay. The beauty and praise-worthiness of the scene has been expressed by the poet (at heart) as such, as if Krishna had enamoured all the milkmaids with the magic of his love. On perceiving this amorous pastime, the gods had hidden their fairies in the mountain crevaces (caves) lest they may also leave for the gameplay. Since the time, Sri Krishna had (stolen) enticed the hearts of the milkmaids, they were completely mermerised into his love. (532)

The poet siam has stated that all the milkmaids had offered themselves completely to Krishna. Some of them were singing, another one was dancing and some had become dumb-founded, being under the spell of his love (keeping quiet with love). Some one was saying that she had assumed the form of Krishna (Lord), while some others, by meditating on True Name, had fallen down on the ground. The poet had felt the beauty of the scene just as the needles get stuck around the magnet piece on perceiving it (due to its pull). (533)

The poet siam has stated that at midnight Sri Krishna told, the milkmaids in a laughing mood, "Let us all leave this gameplay and go back to our homes together. So accepting the advice of Sri Krishna (agreeing to his orders), casting away their hearts' agony, all the milkmaids started moving towards their homes. On reaching home, all of them, with the desire of having sensual pleasures again in the next morning, they slept on their beds. (534)

The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids' group had enjoyed the gameplay of love with Krishna for a long time. Sri Krishna along with the milkmaids, leaving their gameplay came back to their homes. The poet siam has felt about this beauty as such. It appeared as if the accountant (munim) had kept an account and made its total count of the love games played by them. (535)

Now the episode of the detail of the gameplay of milkmaids holding one another's hand begins - the amorous pastime Swaiyya'

In the early morning, Sri Krishna, leaving the home, rushed away to some particular place. There the flowers were blossoming beautifully and the river Jamuna was flowing closely. He was playing there by himself, without any fear or hesitation of any kind. He was playing his flute to call the milkmaids but posing as if he was trying to call his cows with the flute tunes. The poet siam has stated that having heard about the episode of love game. Radha (daughter of Brikhbhan) came running to that place, whose face was beautiful like the moon and whose body was shining like gold. All the poets used to praise her beauty, but her beauty only suited her as it was beyond any description. Having heard about Sri Krishna's praise (beauty) from other friends, Radha came running like a young deer (female) to that place. (537)

Kabit

The daughter of Brikhbhan (Radha) was wearin a white sari (woman's garment) and was looking beautiful and praiseworthy. She was looking like a blossoming flower, unparalleled in nature (none was equal to her, created by the Lord). She was more beautiful than Rambha, Urbasi and Indrani or Mandori. No one could be compared to her in beauty in the whole world. The poet siam has stated that having a necklace of pearls around the neck and with other embellishments, she came to Krishna for enjoying his love affair. She had decorated herself with white coloured beauty aids and she had come there to enjoy the love of Krishna. It appeared as if during a moonlit night Radha had also assumed the form of moonlight. (538)

Swaiyya'

She (Radha) moved from her house, wearing rich clothes and embellishing herself with ornaments. It appeared as if a second form of (supernatural power) moon had appeared, or a white petal (bud) of the lotus flower was looking gorgeous. The poet Siam has stated that Radha, alongwith her friend, had gone for paying her obiesance at the lotus-feet of Sri Krishna. It appeared as if the milkmaids were like the stars shining in the firmament and this beautiful damsel (Radha) was moonlight of the moon among those stars. (539)

Swaiyya'

She (Radha) had developed immense love in her heart for Kahna, and it was not waning at all on any account. Her appearnce (countenance) was like Indra's queen, or like the spouse of the god of love and her beauty (of heart) was in no way less than the other womenfolk. The poet siam has stated that she had come out like a juggler's wife for playing the games of love (amorous pastime) with Krishna fully decorating herself (with beauty aids). It appeared as if the beautiful milkmaids were like the black dark clouds and among these (clouds) Radha had appeared like the beautiful Chanderkala (fairy). (540)

Her beauty was such that even Brahma was enamoured by it and even Shiva's meditative posture was disturbed by perceiving her beauty. By seeing her beauty even Rati was fascinated and the pride of the spouse of Rati (the god of love) about Rati's beauty had been shaken. Her beautiful voice had stolen the cuckoo's (nightingale's) beautiful voice and was nothing before it (was meaningless before her beauty). It appeared as if Radha was like the lightning strike (shining) among the dark clouds of the other milkmaids. (541)

Radha was going to worship the lotus-feet of Krishna by getting herself fully ornamented (embllished with all ornaments). The poet siam has stated that one would get compeletly enamoured by perceiving her beauty, and even beauty would feel belittled (jealous) before her charming beauty. Radha had assumed the form of a beauty infact, with all those beautiful limbs (body formation) or physical attributes which the poets normally adore or depict in their poetry. The god of love (Kamdev) was always mesmerised on seeing her charm, and the moonlight was feeling ashamed of itself (the moon's beauty was no match for her charm). (542)

Radha had embllished herself with all white coloured robes and other attractive ornaments of the same shade, and was looking like a white beauty. Her face was looking glamorous like the beauty of full moon, wherein the moonlight was peeping with all its glory. It appeared that the whole army of the god of love, getting enraged with the love for her charm, was moving with all its glory. Sri Krishna was feeling delighted on seeing her (Rahda), considering her as the most beautiful among all the womenfolk there. (543)

Then Radha said to other milkmaids -

Swaiyya'

Radha laughed on seeing Krishna and then addressed the milkmaids as such : With her teeth shining like the pomegranate seeds and the face shining like the moon Radha told the Brij womenfolk : I have made a bet with Krishna for a win or a loss in that a war of love had begun between us and Krishna (while playing games of love) so let us wage a war of love without any hesitation on our part (without feeling any shame). Thus Radha smilingly told the milkmaids (about her love). (544)

The poet siam has stated that Radha with a smile, told the milkmaids thus. It appears that Brahma had created the charming beauty of Radha with great preparation and concentration (with great dedication). On seeing Sri Krishna, Radha bowed to him slightly. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet thus-It appeared as if Radha could not bear the burden of her youthful beauty (the swelling hissing of her breasts), as such Radha bowed down (to keep her breasts rising beyond limits with passion). All of them were playing the (amorous pastime) game of love together, while the milkmaids were performing their part with full love and concentration. Radha had made herself glamorous with various ornaments, and all her embellishments were of white colour and looking brilliant. Then the poet siam, with full consideration at heart, has stated that her glamour of charm was beyond description. On the other side, the dark coloured Krishna (like black clouds) was seated while on this side the beautiful Radha was shining (flashing) like lightning and looking gorgeous (among dark clouds) against Krishna's charm. (546)

The poet siam has stated that Radha was playing the game of love, alongwith her (girl) friends. From the other side Chanderbhaga (a milkmaid) applying sandal wood paste to their bodies, came forward in the arena. They were all having deer-like eyes and looking glamorous with their gait like that of an elephant. The poet had felt in his mind that the charm of this beautiful scene was far superior to the moonlight even. (547)

Then Chanderbhaga told Radha :

Swaiyya'

Then Chanderbhaga told Radha like this - "O Radha! Let us all get together and play this game with Krishna. Why are you wasting your time in playing with someone else? The poet Siam has stated that he had realised the beauty of this scene within his heart, as if the shining of Radha's moon like face had eclipsed the beauty of the stars of other milkmaids (other milkmaid's beauty was no match against Radha's charm). Radha then said :

Swaiyya'

After hearing all the talk of Chanderbhagha, Radha said, "O friend! Listen, we have borne this for the sake of Krishna (and his love). Since the time we have heard about this game of love, we are alwas thinking of this love only in our mind." The poet siam has stated that by perceiving the beauty of Krishna with our own eyes, we have been enamoured, with body and mind, towards him alone. (549)

Then Chanderbhaga said, "O friend! Listen to me with attention! See, when we perceive Sri Krishna's face, who is seated in his position, we get peace of mind (we get the will to live). Moreover, whatever action pleases the friend, we should perform that function immediately. O Radha ! If we get a chance to see his glance meeting our eyes, I am telling you, we should not waste even a moment in thinking about anything else (but enjoy getting his glance). (550)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

"Listening to Chaderbhaga's talk, Radha advanced forward to Kiss the lotus-feet of Sri Krishna. It appeared as if beautiful snake's off spring (daughter), who was afraid of the bird garuda (blue jay) and was leaving her home for a safer place". The poet siam further says, "The beauty of the milkmaids, leaving their homes, could be explained by comparing it with the flash of lightning appearing midst the dark patch of clouds." (551)

The peot siam has sttated that Sri Krishna had created a wonderful (strange) game play where river Jamuna was flowing on one side, and moonlight was falling beautifully on the water waves; and the milkmaids in their white dresses were looking gorgeous. The beauty of this scene has been depicted by the poet as the flowers were blossoming in the garden of the play theatre. (552)

So accepting Chanderbhaga's suggestion, Radha kissed the lotus-feet of Sri Krishna (bowed to pay her obeisance). By perceiving the beauty of the god of love (Kamdev), she was completely enamoured in his love. It appeared as if the beautiful Radha had woken up from her slumber of inactivity and modesty and had cast away her modesty in his love. She was playing the game (of life) with the Lord, whose limits had not been marvelled by the great Munis (ascetics) even, so she was very fortunate. (553)

Then Krishna told Radha -

Couplet

Krishna laughed and said to Radha, "O beautiful woman with golden body! Let us sing songs of love and play this game (of love). (554)

On hearing these words of Krishna, Radha felt amused within herself and got delighted and joining other milkmaid's she started singing songs of love in the gameplay. (555)

Swiayya

Then Chanderbhagha and Chandermukhi joined Radha in singing songs in tunes of Ragas Sorath, Sarang, perfect Malar, and Bilwal. All the womenfolk of Brij town were enjoying these songs and whosoever would hear these tunes, would be lured with joy. All the deer (male), on hearing these tunes, would be rushing towards Krishna, leaving their mates (female deer), attracted with love (of the songs). (556)

They had put vermillion in their parting of hair of the head, and their hearts were filled with the joy of love. They had embellished themselves with the ornaments like nose ring, necklace bulak', and garlands of pearls which were looking grand, endearing themselves to Krishna. They had covered all the body limbs with various oranments having put antimony in their eyes. The poet siam has stated that these womenfolk (with their glamour) had enamoured Krishna into their love. The poet siam has stated that when Sri Krishna was playing the game of love in the moonlit night, then by perceiving the moon-like beautiful face of Radha, Krishna got completely engrossed in her love. Radha had completely captivated the heart of Krishna and the poet felt like this (seeing this scene) as if the deceiver (Radha) had through her enchanting eyes and looks, deceived Krishna into her love (she had controlled Krishna emotionally fully. (558)

The poet siam had stated that the beautiful Radha, whose face had put the god of love into shame (won over Kamdev) and even the moon was feeling belittled before her beauty, was playing the game of love with Krishna, having decorated herself with ornaments. Even Brahma had created this Radha with great care and love so that nothing was lacking in her beauty. Among all the womenfolk Radha was looking glamourous and gorgeous just as a gem shines in the necklace pearls. (559)

The beautiful Radha was singing songs in rupturous mood and then started clapping. The village demsel, having collyrium in the eyes, was dressed in nice clothes and looking glamorous with oranments. The poet has described the beauty of this scene as if the orchard of women's love for Krishna had blossomed forth with bliss. (560)

The poet siam has described the beauty of the womenfolk engaged in this game of love. The beauty of their faces was gorgeous like the moonlight and their eyes were like the lotus flowers. The poet has felt the beauty of the whole scene within his heart, as if those girl friends wer enticing the hearts of all men, while the Munis (ascetics) were also enamoured by their beauty. (561)

One girl, Chanderprabha was looking like sachi (the spouse of Indra), while another damsel called Mainkala was beautiful like the god of love, while the teeth of another girl, Biju chhata were shining like the pomengrant seeds and as compared to her Rati (the spouse of Kamdev) was nothing in beauty. By seeing her, even the lightning and the deer were feeling belittled (ashamed) and their pride (prestige) was shattered. The poet siam has described that all the milkmaids were completely mesmerised by perceiving the charm of Sri Krishna. (562)

The Lord (Krishna) who was too deep to be probed by anyone, then said to Radha. The poet siam has detailed it as such-Sri Krishna told Radha, "O Radha! Remove your head cover (cloth) and dance in this amorous pastime without having any hesitation or modesty. Then the face of Radha shone forth like the half moon appearing suddenly from midst the clouds. (563)

The womenfolk were looking charming with vermillion on their foreheads and with yellow coloured round mark on the forehead. The beauty of Swaranprabha and Chanderprabha had completely (submerged) put to shame the beauty or charm of all other milkmaids. They were wearing white coloured, red coloured or blue coloured robes and looking charming. The poet siam has depicted the scene as if all the milkmaids were feeling delighted at the sight of the lotus-faced Krishna's charm. (564)

All the milkmaids, having adorned their bodies with oranments, were making fun and frolic there. All those women, who had developed great love for Sri Krishna, were taking part in the play (who were keen to meet him). The poet siam has described the beauty of the scene as if the maids were transformed completely into Krishna's form due to their love (for him). It appeared as if all the fair-complexioned women had changed their complexion into the dark colour of Krishna, due to their immense love. (565)

The poet siam has described that Radha was looking at the face of Krishna, just as a female deer views her mate (a male deer) completely enamoured by his love. She was feeling amused within her heart by joining in the game of love, whose body was like gold and her face was shining like moon. She was talking full of aspirations and smilingly said something. She was completely over powered by the charm of Krishna, considering him more beautiful than herself and was enticed by his love. (566)

Radha was completely enamoured by the beautiful charm of Krishna. The forest, full of flowers was looking gorgeous on the banks of the river Jamuna. Sri Krishna was sitting on the banks of Jamuna, and was completely enticed by the love of Radha due to her beauty and she was feeling proud of her flame of love which she had ignited in his heart. Just as the beautiful women, with the arrows of their eyebrows and enchanting eyes, allure men into their bonds of love, she had enamoured Krishna fully. (567)

Radha had developed the greatest love for Sri Krisha, which did not diminish, but had increased all the more. All the milkmaids, leaving aside their modesty or hesitation were keen in playing the games of love with Sri Krishna. The poet Siam has depicted the beauty of the scene for those womenfolk who were most charming among them. All those milkmaids perceiving the charming countenance of Sri Krishna, were mingling with him, having become a part and parcel of him. (568)

All the milkmaids were having deer-like eyes, with golden bodies, and faces shining like the moon, and it appeared as if they were like Lachhmi, fully immersed in the ocean (of Krishna's love). The beauty of Rati was even not comparable to the (love) beauty of these milkmaids or even the Ravana's spouse (Mandodri) or king Indra's spouse (Sachi) could not equal their beauty. Being pleased with them, the creator Brahma, through his benevolence had made their waists beautiful and delicate like that of the lion. The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna was in immense love with these milkmaids. (569)

There was a storm of gesticulation (charm), with abuses being hurled on each other, and the milkmaids were playing the games of love with singing songs and enjoying fun and frolic for hours together. Some were singing and some others were clapping, while some others were saying, "O girls! Let us join him and dance (in ecstasy). "The poet siam has stated that where Sri Krishna was playing the games of love (amorous pastime), there was so much fun and joyous scenes. (570)

Taking permission from Sri Krishna, the damsels were playing the games of love with great joy just as Rambha assumed different forms in the assembly of Indra (king of heavens) for fun. It appeared as if someone was the daughter of the mythological human body with horses head or the offspring of (snake) (They were all looking charming). All of them were dancing like the fish making fun in the waters. (571)

All the people were fully enamoured by their beauty just as moonlight would appear faded before their charm, or songs were being sung in praise of his (Krishna's) charm or just as the bees are enganged in the honeycomb, in the same way the hearts of the whole populace were enamoured with his charm. (572)

Then Sri Krishna started playing a beautiful tune (with his flute) in Raga, mixing the ragas of Sorath, Sarang, perfect Malahar with this raga. All the milkmaids of Brij were thrilled by hearing this beautiful tune with their ears. All the birds and deer were enticed by this tune, including all those, who had heard this Raga (all were attracted towards it). (573)

The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna was playing and singing songs in beautiful tunes with lot of love and fun. Sri Krishna with flute was sitting among the beautiful damsels just as a deer (male) looks glamorous among his mates (female deer). Sri Krishna, whose praises were being sung by the whole populace, could not be separated from those milkmaids as he had in a moment, enamoured the hearts of all the milkmaids for playing the games of love (had stolen their hearts). (574)

The poet siam has described the beauty of the scene as if he had mingled both youthful exuberance and charming face within his beautiful appearance. By perceiving his charm, one would get-enthralled and by listening to his talk with one's ears, all the afflictions and sufferings would be destroyed (cast away). Being delighted with his appearance, Radha had asked him (Sri Krishna) some querries. In fact, by hearing his talk, Radha was feeling elated and Krishna was also getting delighted with Radha's talk. (575)

The poet siam has stated that all the milkmaids were playing together the games of love with Krishna. During that period (of gameplay) they were neither worried about their hbody nor did they care for their dresses (being care free). How far could I depict their praises and beauty and being impressed by their charm all these through are kept amassed within only? Let us continue with the description of the songs of Krishna, which were pleasing to the heart, for a little while more, so listen with full attention. (576)

Krishna told the milkmaids with a happy mood, "O dear friends! I am asking you with a spirit of love only, as per the traditions of true love, that let us now hear some songs from you also." (577)

Swaiyya'

Listening to the talk of Sri Krishna all the milkmaids were singing beautiful songs of praise. Even Rambha and Ghritachi fairies of Indra's court could not match with their dancing in his court. The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna, the bestower of fearlessness to the royal elephant (Gajraj) was playing (game of love) with them. Even gods from heaven, riding in their chariots, were coming to watch their dance. (578)

The Lord (Ram) in Treta Yuga, had killed the mighty Ravana, as Ram's incarnation had assumed the decorum of the greatest type, the same Lord in the form of Krishna, was singing songs of love for the milkmaids. His dark coloured complexion was looking glorious with yellow coloured clothes, among them. The same Lord was looking stubborn in the form of Krishna and was playing with the milkmaids. (579)

The black cuckoos (nightingales) were making pleasant sounds and pea-cock were producing their beautiful (noise) sounds on all the four directions. The poet siam has stated that Krishna, like the god of love, was looking glamorous there and on seeing him the milkmaids had developed great love towards him. It appeared as if black dark clouds had gathered around. Among all the milkmaids, Radha was looking glorious, as if lightning was flashing among the dark clouds. (580)

Radha, who had put collyrium in her eyes, and whose nose ring was giving signs of new kind (love), whose brilliance was like the moonlight. The beauty of Radha has been depicated by the poet that she had embellished herself with various oranments with a round coloured mark (bindi) on her forehead on perceiving whom Sri Krishna was attracted towards her (enamoured by her), having cast away all his worries. (581)

Sri Krishna laughed and said something beautiful for playing with Radha, on hearing which, her love got a boost and all her gloom was gone (lost). The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids were keenly watching the beauty of the scene. The gods and Shiva's musicians while proceeding to heavens, on seeing the beautiful scene, could not move forward and stopped there only (to watch the fun). (582)

The poet has praised the scene and stated that all the milkmaids, singing songs (of love) in Sarang and Gouri' Ragas came running to Sri Krishna who was wearing yellow scarf. He got delighted, while some others were rushing towards the dark complexioned Krishna. On seeing the beauty of the scene, the poet has stated that the maids were embracing Krishna just as the black bee hovers around the flowers. (583)

The poet siam has praised the Lord, who was a great warrior and enemy of the demons and was the greatest ascetic among the medicants, and now was a great lover among beauty lovers. His beautiful neck was like that of a pigeon, and whose beautiful face was shining like the moonlight. He had stretched the bow of his eyebrows to attract the deer-like womenfolk. (584)

Sri Krishna was moving around alongwith beautiful maids and playing his flute, with tunes of Ramkali and Sarang Ragas. Radha alongwith the group of milkmaids was singing with great love and bliss, at heart. Sri Krishna was also fondling and making fun with Radha, who was most beautiful of all, whose face was shining like the moon, and whose eyes were looking glamorous like the petals of the lotus flower. The poet siam has stated that Radha told the great lover, Sri Krishna like this, whose countenance was shining like the moon, and whose eyes were black like the deer-eyes, whose waist was delicate like that of a lion; she addressed Sri Krishna like this, which helped all other milkmaids to cast away all their afflictions or worries of heart. (586)

He (Krishna) said smiling, who had swallowed the brilliance of the ocean foam (flame) and booking gorgeous he stated something (about his love), who was omni-present, being prevalent in the world, in the sun, in the human beings, in the trees, in the animals, from elephant to ants, he talked to the milkmaids some beautiful words which were very alluring. On hearing his talk, all the milkmaids were feeling delighted while the glomorous Radha was equally thrilled on hearing this (beautiful talk). (587)

On hearing Krishna's talk with their ears, the milkmaids were immersed in his love, specially those damsels who had embellished themselves with a necklace and bul'ak like ornaments, with vemillion applied to their parting hair, and they had decorated themselves for the first time. The poet siam has stated that Krishna was the greatest incarnation, being like the invaluable stone in the ornaments of the milkmaids. It appeared as if he had enticed the hearts of all the milkmaids wit his mischievous moves. (588)

Then Radha said to Krishna in such a beautiful manner, while smiling and the poet siam has stated that the deer-like mischievous eyes and with loving words, she said. the beauty of the scene had created a new desire for praising the whole situation. It appeared as if she was fondling with him with great love just as Rati was lovingly talking to her spouse. (589)

It appeared as if the golden bodies of the milkmaids had endeared themselves to the heart of Krishna with extreme passions of love. The beautiful milkmaids, whose beauty was inderscribable were playing the games of love with Krishna. It seems that Krishna had organised a great assembly of loving faces for taking part in his game of love like a great painting. The poet had felt in his heart, as if Radha was shining like the moon among the other maids. (590)

On taking the orders of Sri Krishna, Radha with great efforts, was playing the game of love. All the milkmaids, holding one another's hands, formed a circle and started clapping and dancing. On pondering over their episode in mind the poet has stated tht it appeared as if Radha was shining like the lighnting among the beautiful clouds of other milkmaids. (591)

Krishna was then singing songs in Nat Nayak, perfect Malhar, Bilwal and Dhamar Ragas among the milkmaids, mixing them wih other Ragas like Sorath, Sarang, Ramkali and bibhas etc. The womenfolk were completely mesmerised with his songs and were enticed like the deer (female), as if he was calling them. The poet has depicted the beauty of the scene as if he was shooting arrows of love with the streched bow of his eyebrows. (593)

He was singing songs in Megh, Malhar, Dev gandhari, and Gouri Ragas (with his flute). He was mingling with them other Ragas like Jaitsri, Ma'lsri, and Nat Nayak with such perfection, on hearing which all the milkmaids of Brij (town) were fully amused. Even the gods were delighted alongwith anyone else who heard it. What to talk of others, even the assembly of Indra's court would leave their seats and come down to listen to his songs. (594)

The poet siam has stated that three milkmaids, joining with ecstasy of love, started singing together. The three milkmaids, Chanderbhaga, Chandermukhi and Radha were embellished with ornaments. They had put collyrium in their eyes, with a circular coloured mark on the forehead (bindi), with vermillion applied to their parting hair (and they were looking glamorous). The poet was impressed with the beauty of the scene and felt, as if the fortune of the womenfolk had suddenly awakened to such loving care. (595)

She had borne the jokes (mockery) of the populace even for her immense love of Krishna. She was wearing the necklace of pearls around her neck, whose beauty has been stated by the poet just as the darkness had hidden itself in the depths of the under world (netherland) on the appearance of full moon. The poet siam has stated that Krishna was among the milkmaids, without having any fear or hesitation in his mind. The same Lord, who alongwith Lachhman, had gone to the forest for exile just on hearing one word of his father (Dasrath). The tresses of his beautiful hair were falling on his face, and he was to enlighten all the saints of the world with his knowledge. The poet on seeing the tresses of his hair, has praised them as if the off springs of snakes were curling around the tree of sandalwood. (599)

The same Krishna, who had tied a yellow piece of cloth around his body, was playing (the game of love) with the milkmaids, who was to crush the heads of the enemies, and who would bless the saints with his good wishes. The poet Siam has stated that the Lord, who was pervading the whole world, and who was indestructable, his tresses were looking glamorous as if the sandal wood tree was covered with small snakes (off springs) all around. (600)

The Lord, whose nose was like the parrots, was having deer-like beautiful eyes, was moving around the womenfolk (milkmaids) with great affection, who was dreaded (feared) by his enemies and was merged with his saints fully. The poet has described the beauty and greatness of the great Lord as such, that though we have talked about his love already, but he was also pervading the heart of Ravana even. (601)

The poet siam has stated that the dark complexioned Kahna was playing (the game of love) with the milkmaids. He was looking glamorous among them while the milkmaids were all seated around him. The place, where flowers were blossoming all around, where the moonlight was shining beautifully, and it appeared as if Krishna was wearing the necklace of the beautiful eyes of the milkmaids (their eyes were glued to his face). (602)

Couplet

The poets, with a clear and pure intellect, have praised the beauty of Chanderbhaga by saying that her ear rings (ornament called karan phool) were looking resplendent like the sun. (603)

Swaiyya'

The poet Siam has stated that by perceiving the beauty of Krishna's face all get enamoured and get caught in the noose of modesty, whose lustre was illuminating, and whose good thoughts have surpassed all thinking. His glimpses had enticed all the on-lookers and even the music have lost their concentration in meditation with his furious looks. Radha's ear rings (karanphul) were looking glamorous as if the sun had shone forth among the dark clouds. (604)

Krishna, who had established a beautiful status among Brij residents, was playing among the milkmaids; his eyes were deer-like and who was the son of Nand and Jasodha. He was surrounded by the milkmaids and I am tempted to sing his praises, as if Rati alongwith the moon had encircled Kamdev (god of love) to play and fondle with him. (605)

All the milkmaids were feeling elated by seeing Krishna and had given up all the fear of modesty or their mothers-in-law. They had left their spouses at their homes, without saying anything either to their spouses or to the mothers. They were clapping and making fun and frolic alongwith Krishna and were singing songs while playing and fondling around. The poet siam has stated that whomsoever Krishna looks at (with love), she falls down on the ground being enamoured with his love. (606)

The Lord creator, who was born in Treta Yuga, now had worn yellow clothes around his body; who had deceived the mighty Raja Bal and had killed all the stubborn enemies, by getting furious with rage. The milkmaids were getting enticed by Krishna, who was wearing yellow clothes, and falling on the ground, being mesmerised. Just as the deer gets fallen down with the striking of an arrow, the maids were falling with love, struck from the lustful eyes of Krishna. (607)

The damsels were playing with Krishna, feeling a great body relief of joy. They had developed great love for Sri Krishna, having lost all love for money or such attachments (having no love for such things). All the milkmaids, dressed up in colourful clothes, were enjoying moving around with him. I have been impressed with their beauty just as a butterfly blossoms forth on the sight of a flower, in the same way these milkmaids were playing in the jungle with the flower like Krishna, and were blooming like him. (608)

All the milkmaids, by devoting their love for (Lord) Krishna at heart, were playing these games. Some have lost all sense except of concentrating their glance on Krishna with devotion, and they have no other feeling in the body. They were flying in the skies or the whole lot of gods even. The poet siam has stated that Krishna also was greatly agitated with their love and moving amongst them with delightful mood. (609)

Perceiving Radha in her new make-up, Sri Krishna smiled and said to her, who was decorated with bulak (ornaments), with all sorts of loving and charming gesticulations, who had decorated her forehead with the round mark of vermillion (bindi). She was feeling greatly delighted at heart with her mischievous eyes and would laugh away at the glance of Sri Krishna. (610)

The milkmaids were singing in the tune of a flute to make dark complexioned Kahna listen to their music. Their faces were shining like moon and their lotus large eyes were looking glamorrous. The charming sound produced by their feet touching the ground through their anklets, has been described by the poet siam as tambourine sounds with a small drum or a drum sounds alongwith a kettledrum (various musical instuments). (611)

The poet Siam has stated that the milkmaids were enjoying the fun and frolic with the dark complexioned Kahna, being immersed in his love, whose faces were shining like the moon and who were looking glorious with their lotus type large eyes. Even the god of love, on perceiving them, was feeling jealous and even the deer would give in before their charm. The beauty of the lion and the nightingale (with their delicate waist and musicial note) could be easily sacrificed on him (no match for him). (612)

The Lord (Ram) who had bestowed the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhishan and had killed an enemy powerful like Ravana. The same Lord was, casting away the bondage of modesty (the ship of bashfulness), playing with the maids; The Lord who had killed the demon Mur and had measured the stature of Raja Bala, (king Bavan). The poet siam has stated that the same Lord, in the form of Sri Krishna (Madho), was now playing the game of love with the milkmaids. With great ecstasy. (613)

The Lord, who being infuriated with rage, could frighten the great demon named Mur, and who could cast away the bondage of the elephant (Gaj caught by octopus) and who could help His saints in their afflictions and sufferings. The poet siam has stated that the same Lord (Krishna) was now responsible for telling the group of milkmaids with the lustful love, like this. (614)

Kahna's talk to milkmaids.

Swaiyya'

Krishna said, "O milkmaids! Play the game of love with me, without having any hesitation (of modesty) in mind. O dear ones! Do not take it as a false promise and take it from me as completely truthful, and listening to Krishna's talk all the milkmaids, forgetful of their modesty or shyness, proceeded alongwith him in this game of love. The poets have depicted this scene just as the firefly (glow worm), leaving the lake at night, flies off towards the sky. (615)

To please Sri Krishna only, Radha was singing songs in the company of other milkmaids and she dances with greater love and zeal midst the other milkmaids just as the flash of lightning appears among the dark overcast clouds. The poet Siam has praised the beauty of her songs as the nightingale sings in the month of March (springs) with joy. (616)

All the womenfolk (milkmaids), embellishing their bodies with all sorts of ornaments, immersed in his love, were playing games (of fun) with Krishna, having lost all interest in money or other considerations of bondage. The poet Siam, seeing the beauty of the scene, has depicted it as the flash of lightning among the dark clouds in the month of Savan (monsoon). (617)

The poet Siam has stated that the beautiful milkmaids, immersed in the love of Krishna, were playing with him, whose beauty was surpassing that of the beauty of sachi (Indra's queen) or of Rati (the spouse of the god of love) they were all playing, games of love, were going on during day and might at the banks of Jamna without any hesitation (in great style). Chanderbhaga, Chandermukhi and Radha were all dancing without any hesitation of modesty or (shamelessly) shame. (618)

The milkmaids were taking part in the games of love with great style, whose eyes were beautiful like the deer-eyes, and whose beauty surpassed that of Sachi's (Indra's queen). Their bodies were shining like gold and faces were shining like the moon. It appeared as if the creator had moulded Radha with most beautiful material in hand, and moulded others out of the remaining material (after Radha). (619)

All the milkmaids, wsho had come there to play the game of love, had worn clothes of rfgv beauty and elegance, just as some one was wearing yellow coloured robes, another was wearing sunflower coloured clothes, another one with green clothes and another one had saffron coloured clothes. The beauty of such praiseworthy women has been depicted by the poet as if these milkmaids were dancing incessantly till they fell down on the ground, but with eyes glued on Sri Krishna's face, and their eyes were not satiated yet (with his glance). (620)

On perceiving the intense love of those milkmaids, the much amused Krishna was laughing and then developing greatest love for them, he was almost caught in their noose of love. By seeing such a (Lord) Krihna all the virtues would get (increased) exalted and the sins would be cast away. The teeth of Sri Krishna were shining brightly just as the lightning flashes opposite the moon or like the pomengrate seeds. (621)

(The Lord) Krishna, who was the killer of all the demons, had similingly said something to the dairymaids, who was bestowing benedictions to his saints but would destroy all the opponents (despots); the same Krishna, son of Jasodha and brother of Balram, was now playing the game of love (with milkmaids) and it appeared, his looks (glance of eyes) had completely mesmerised the faith of these womenfolk in him. The poet siam has stated that the tunes of his flute in Devgandhari, Bilwal, perfect Malhar ragas were heard, alongwith tunes in ragas Jaitsri, Gujri, accompained by Ramkali raga. Whosoever had heard those tunes, would turn into an ascetic from a normal stable life or from the root into a living being. Such were the beautiful tunes played by Krishna on his flute white playing with the milkmaids and enjoying fun and frolic (raas mandal). (623)

He played the tunes in Nat-Na'tak Raga, alongwith Gouri Raga so beautifully, and had played the tunes in Sorath, Sarang, Ramkali and Jaitsri Raga equally well. All the people (masses) living on Earth were greatly amused with the tunes of Krishna's flute, while the king of gods (Indra) was also delighted with it. Infact, Sham (Krishna) had played such charming tunes on his flute at the banks of Jamuna, in the company of milkmaids with great joy. (624)

The face of Radha was beautiful like the moon, whose body's brilliance was like gold and it appeared as if Brahma had moulded her shape with his own hands. In the moonlight this milkmaid was most conspcious in the whole group of milkmaids. Radha had got an inkling of whatever Sri Krishna had thought about her in his mind. (625)

So Sri Krishna told to Radha -

Couplet

Krishna looked at the body of Radha and laughed saying, "O Radha your (eyes) body has the beauty, possessed by the god of love (Kamdev). (626)

Swaiyya'

"O milkmaids, Listen to me! You have stolen the beauty of fortune and your (face) countenace is shining like the moonlight. Your eyes are like the penetrating arrows and your eye-brows are like a stretched bow. Your voice is like the mightingale's, with a neck like the pigeon. I have said what I had in my mind, not only that, you have stolen my heart even (you have enamoured me with your beauty). This damsal is (brilliant) looking glamorous like the flash of lightning." (627)

Sri Krishna, accompanied by Radha, was singing beautiful songs of joy and love, and the tunes were in Sarang, Dev Gandhari, Vibhas and Bilawal ragas. If any fool or (person without any sense of ragas) would hear these tunes, he would come rushing towards it (being attracted) leaving all his household. Even if a bird were flying high up in the sky and if it were to hear the flute tunes, it would stop on hearing this note. (628)

Krishna was thus dancing and singing songs in the company of milkmaids. He was singing and playing with excessive delight and bliss, without having any fear or hesitation in mind. The poet siam has stated that Krishna was singing in Sarang Raga and was clapping with a blissful delight. It appeared as if during the monsoon season, (sa'van month) the (male) peacock dances with joy in the company of (female) peahens. (629)

Thus Kahna was dancing around in the company of milkmaids, whose (his) face was more charming than the moon itself. He was playing around the jungle, which looked glamorous on the banks of Jamuna river, on a moonlit night. Krishna was looking glamorous among Radha and the proud Chanderbhaga, just as an emerald shines among the stones studded in the ring. (630)

The poet siam has stated that Krishna, completely immersed in the love of beauty, was dancing with the beautiful tunes on the flute. He had a saffron mark on his forehead with a loin cloth around his body alongwith a new cover for the head and was playing alongwith the three milkmaids namely Radha, Chanderbhaga and Chandermukhi. Sri Krishna had enticed all of them with the twist of his mischievens eyes (and had won their hearts). (631)

The poet has stated that even the fairy called Gritchi was no match in beauty to Radha. Neither Kamdev's spouse (Rati) nor the king Indra's Sachi could match the beauty of Radha. It appeared as if the creator had taken out the complete grandeur and beauty of moon to be assimilated into the beauty of Radha. Then this beautiful figure had been permeated in the heart of Nand's son (Krishna) for his enjoyment and merriment. (632)

Radha, Chanderbhaga and Chandermukhi all join hands to play the game of love with him. All the charming damsels join in singing songs and clapping with hands to amuse him. Whosoever perceives them playing gets enamoured with them and the gods were also watching the whole fun. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna had taken the form of (Kamdev) god of love and was looking gorgeous among the milkmaids. (633)

Even Lachhmi could not be compared with the beauty of Radha, whose delicate waist would put even the lion to shame, even gold is feeling shy (belittled) before her brilliance, and on seeing her, one's afflictions even are cast away (removed). The poet siam has stated that there was no other woman on par with her (in beauty) and she was looking glamorous like Rati. Radha was seated among the clouds of other milkmaids and looking glamours just as lightning shines among the patch of dark clouds. (634)

By embellishing themselves with all the ornaments and wearing necklaces of pearls the womenfolk (milkmaids) were playing with Krishna, who was most lovable and affectionate with love and joy, specially where Chandermukhi was standing alongwith Radha. (Even Chanderbhaga had spread the aroma of her beauty among the milkmaids. (635)

Chandermukhi on seeing the charming face of Krishna, was getting enamoured with his love. So she started singing songs and clapping with her hands and it appeared as if she was enjoying great bliss. She started dancing in ecstasy. She was feeling greatly delighted, by having the greatest love and attachment for Shiam (Kahna) (having only one hunger for his love). (636)

Couplet

Sri Krishna, feeling elated in heart, got up and started playing his flute. Hearing the tune of his flute, all the milkmaids felt excited.and delighted. (637)

Swaiyya'

As soon as Krishna started playing on his flute, all the milkmaids of Brij town got enticed by it while the deer and birds of the jungle also got attracted and all others, who heard the flute tunes, were feeling amused. All the milkmaids became still like statues, being fully mesmerised with Krishna's love. Krishna's flute had affected the waters of Jamuna, which stopped its flow even, while the wind stopped blowing being enchanted with the Krishna's flute. (638)

The wind for a moment, felt so much enchanted, as to stop blowing, and the river waters became silent. Any woman from Brij, who happened to come there, fully dressed up with head cover (dupata) lost all sense of proportion as regards her body. It appeared as if by hearing the flute tunes, she had lost all her senses and she had become a mere statue, without any movement. (639)

Krishna was playing on his flute with great love, without having any sort of hesitation in mind. Even the birds would come running towards him on hearing his flute thus, making the forest completely motionless. By hearing the flute tunes, all the milkmaids were greatly pleased and were not having any hesitation about their modesty or shyness. With eyes aghast and fully opened, they were watching Krishna just as deer get together on hearing the sounds of hunter's special drum (ghandher'a) without making any noise. (640)

The poet siam has stated that the flute tunes played by Krishna were really beautiful, as various Ragas like Sorath, Devgandhari, Vibhas, Bilawal, etc. were being played (through the flute). Krishna, whose body was shining like gold, whose face was glorious like the moon, his flute had enamoured the milkmaids so much that they were ensnared by his love. (641)

The Ragas like Devgandhari, Vibhas, Bilawal, Sarang etc. were mainly being played with his flute, while the tunes of Sorath, perfect Malhar, or Malsri Ragas were very soothing to the mind; infact all the men or gods on hearing these tunes were getting enamoured with it and the milkmaids on hearing these tunes would come rushing towards Krishna. Infact, the magical tunes produced by Krishna's flute were such, as if Krishna had woven a noose of love around them. (642)

Krishna whose face was most beautiful, who had worn yellow covered cloth on his shoulders and who killed the demon named 'Agh, and had saved his father from the cobra, who had gulped (swallowed) him. He was destroyer of all despots but would cast away all the sufferings of his saints, the same Krishna, with his charming flute tunes had co-enamored, the hearts of many people. (643)

(Ram) The Lord who had handed over the kingdom to Vibhishan and who had killed Ravana; the same Lord (Krishna) who had cut off the head of Shisupal with his revolving (Sudarshan) wheel being enraged, the same Lord was as charming as (Kamdev) the god of love and the spouse of Sita (Ram), whose beauty was unmatched (by anyone else); the same Lord, was now having a flute in hand and alluring with his love the hearts of beautiful milkmaids. (644)

The milkmaids called Radha, Chanderbhaga, and Chandermukhi were now playing the game (of love), all together with Krishna. All had joined together in singing beautiful songs, and were also clapping their hands. Then all the gods, leaving their places in heavens, had come down to watch this fun and frolic. Now there is a short episode of killing a demon, which you might like to hear. (645)

The place, where the milkmaids were dancing, and the black bees were humming around the blooming flowers and the beautiful Jamuna was flowing nearby, and Krishna alongwith Balram were singing songs together. They were making fun and frolic there without having any hesitation in mind and playing games of love. Both were reciting Kabits of sensuous love, competing with each other, and never accepting defeat, (thus enjoying fun there). (646)

Now the episode of one demigod flying away to the skies with the milkmaids (having kidnapped them)

Swaiyya'

There was a demigod, who was coming there to watch this game of love, and seeing the beautiful milkmaids, he had aroused his sexual desires, which he could not control. So he flew to the skies, taking the milkmaids alongwith him, and no one from the arena of this fun and frolic obstructed him. Just as he was flying away from the place of gameplay, Sri Krishhna alongwith Balram, like a lion stopped the deer-like enemy. (647)

Sri Krishna and Balram, furious with rage, started fighting a battle against the demigod. Both had uprooted trees and holding them in their hands, in horrible posture, both managed to sustain and uphold their strength, and then threw the demon on to ground. The poet has depicted the beauty of this scene as if a bungry hawk had swooped down on the brahmani duck having got his eyes freed from the leather blinkers and killed him suddenly. (648)

Here the chapter of Bachittar Natak Granth dealing with the story of getting the milkmaids released from the demigod and killing him in the Krishnavtar episode is completed.

Swaiyya'

After killing him Balram and Krishna played on the flute, without having any further hesitation or doubts. The same Lord getting infuriated, had killed Ravana in the battle field and being pleased had handed over the kingdom (of Lanka) to Vibhishan, whose prowess had been witnessed by the Kabuja (hunch backed) and whose valour had been realised by the demon Mur. The same Lord was now playing on his flute, as if he had sounded the victory over the demon. (649)

With the soothing tunes of the flute, the trees started blooming with freshness and the cosy springs (waterfalls) started flowing from the mountains. The birds of the forest were feeling regaled with the tunes of the flute, while the deer stopped grazing grass (in ecstasy). Thus Krishna, while playing on his flute, tunes in various ragas like Dev gandhari, Bilawal and Sarang, mixed various tunes being delighted with joy and to watch this fun and miracle, the gods came down together from the heavens. (650)

Even the waters of Jamuna stopped its flow on hearing the flute tunes, as the Jamuna was also keenly interested in listening to this music. Even the elephants of the jungle, and the deer were getting allured with the tunes, of the flute. The gods from heavens, leaving their pedestals, were coming, being completely immersed in the music. Even the birds of the forest, on hearing such tunes, were getting absorbed (intoxicated) on the trees, with stretched wings. (651)

Whichever milkmaid started playing with Sri Krishna in his game (of love), she would get involved in his love only, being care free from the worldly wealth. Out of these women folk, the one whose body was shining like gold, viz Chandermukhi, with a waist like the tigers and who was looking most glamorous among them was getting amused within her heart, on hearing these tunes with her ears, and it appeared she had fallen flat on the ground like the deer getting mesmerised with the sound of the special drum (ghandehr'ai). (652)

After performing these games of wonder (miracles) both Balram and Krishna went away to their place, singing songs of joy. The poet siam has stated that both brothers were looking glorious just as the acrobat enters the arena in various forms of jugglery. The eyes of Balram were looking so charming as if they were moulded in the love of Kamdev (god of love), as Balram was more glamorous than the spouse of Rati (Kamdev) even, and had left the god of love (Kamdev) miles behind in this race of beauty. (653)

Then both (Balram and Krishna) feeling greatly elated and relaxed at heart, having killed the enemy, went back to their home, and both were looking more charming than anyone else, with their faces shining like the moon. Whosoever else looked at them was equally delighted. It appeared as if warriors Ram and Lachhman, having killed the enemy, were going back to their home (place). (654)

Now begins the episode of playing in the streets (bylanes)

Swaiyya'

Then Sri Krishna's told the milkmaids, "Let us go into the bylanes of the jungle (between the forest flowers and trees) and continue playing our games, while dancing and singing these songs of joy. Moreover listen to me, let us complete the function which pleases us most. If you were to accept my proposal, then you should feel yourself relaxed with joy and let me also have some more peace and relaxation. (655)

Accepting Kahna's proposal the womenfolk of Brij started playing the game of fun and frolic in the bylanes of Kunj (jungle) and started singing the song, which pleased Krishna most. They were singing in Dev gandhari and perfect Malhar ragas, expressing the same thoughts (of love) on hearing which all the populace of the town and the heavens even were greatly amused. (656)

Accepting Sri Krishna's proposal all the milkmaids were moving on in the bylanes in great style. Infact, all of them were looking glorious, with lotus like faces and golden bodies just as god of love (Kamdev) would look like. All these damsels, mad in the love of Krishna, were running ahead of him, playing the games of love. The poet siam has stated that the beauty of this scene could be compared with the slow majestic movement of an elephan, intoxicated with sensual love. (657)

Krishna wanted to grasp those milkmaids but they would run away from him without being caught (in his grasp), just as the (female) deer would not allow her mate at the time of mating (making love). In the byelanes of Kunj, Radha was also running amuck. The game of fun and frolic was created by Krishna there, (which is beyond description). (658)

Sri Krishna then made that night as never ending (almost equivalent to six months), and made it darker than normal. The poet siam has stated that Krishna had encircled the milkmaids there. By the mischievous looks of Krishna's eyes, the milkmaids had fallen on the ground feeling dazed and many became his slaves. It made an impression on mind as if a wounded deer had fallen on the piercing of an arrow of the hunter. (659)

The (fallen) milkmaids then gets up and starts running around, without being grasped (caught) by Krishna but Krishna continues to follow her, who is equally absorbed in her love and is also running around in this game of love. Radha was thus pierced by the arrows of Krishna's loving and mischevous eyes, as if he had stretched the bow of his eyebrows (with lustful eyes). Then suddenly (Radha) she fell down on the ground being dazed (dogged by his love), just as a hunter makes his prey fall down (with his arrow). (660)

After checking up Radha's condition, Sri Krishna started running around the bylanes again, as Sri Krishna was an expert in the art of love, and followed the milkmaid again. The person who was lover of Sri Krishna's wonderous drama (miracle) would attain salvation (from worldly bondage) in a moment. So the poet felt like praising this scene, just as a deer runs in front of her hunter (chaser); (in the same way the milkmaid was running away from Krishna). (661)

Sri Krishna was keen to grasp hold of the running Radha, just as someone forces another person running on the banks of Jamuna to accept defeat after making him run incessantly or someone, riding the horse of love (of mind) and stretching the bows of the eyebrows, shoots arrows of lustful eyes making the other person surrender meekly to his advances. The poet has felt the beauty of the scene as comparable to a rider, making the deer run cease-lessly and then catching the pray. (662)

After catching hold of Radha, Krishna was telling her some sweet words, "O queen of milkmaids! Listen, why are you feeling sky of me and running away from me? O lotus-faced beauty, having a body shining like gold! I have gauged your mind's predicament". The maddened Radha, enamoured by the love of Sri Krishna, and having a charming heart, was running around the forest, looking for Krishna (her love)! (663)

Radha, on seeing the other milkmaids coming towards her, felt little shyness and lowered her eyes (Her eyes were looking gloomy then), it appeared as if their glow had been snatched away by (the male deer) Krishna or her eyes were like the petals of a lotus flower. Then the damsel (Radha) laughed and said to Krishna some sweet words, "O Krishna! Please leave your grasp, as all the girl friends are watching us!" (664)

Then on hearing her words, Krishna said like this, "I would not leave your hands, if the other milkmaids are watching us, so what? I am not afraid of them. Moreover, this place of our gameplay is not known to other people, so no one else knows about it. Why are you quarreling with me, apart from you no one else is afraid of them (worried about them)? (665)

On hearing these words of Krishna, the girl, Radha said to Krishna, "O Krishna! It is moonlit night, let it become little darker. Having heard your words I have felt that you are not feeling shy or hesitant about these milkmaids. It appears you have let loose all your modesty or shyness." (666)

"O Krishna! You are just kidding with me and laughing only or do you really love me? All the other milkmaids, watching this fun, are laughing at us. O Krishna! Please leave me alone, and cast away your lustful eyes and thoughts of love for me from your mind. So O Krishna! I am telling you to have little more consideration of moderation of modesty." (667)

Then Krishna said, "O dear friend! Have you ever heard that a hungry bird (having the appetite) having caught hold of a catch (fish), had let go its prey?" (The poet siam has stated that) you must have heard the episode of Brahma that a lover never leaves his beloved or his attachment for someone (he loves) or a police inspector (Kotwal), having caught hold of a swindler, never lets him go scotfree. As such I would not let you go. Have you ever heard that a lion, having caught hold of a deer, lets her go scotfree?" (668)

These things were told by Sri Krishna to the damsel (Radha), who was a picture of youthful beauty and fully involved in his love, and was more charming than Chanderbhaga or other milkmaids in beauty. The poet siam has depicted the beauty of this scene, as this. Just as a lion grasps the deer in his clutches, in the same way Krishna had clasped her (Radha) in his embrace and with his strength over-powered her in his full control. (669)

The poet siam, while describing this episode of Krishna, has stated that keeping her in his control, Krishna then spoke to her these words. As per the language of love, those sweet words were really full of love and admiration (like the nectar). Krishna, in an egoistic style, said, "O damsel of Brij! What do you lose (in this game of love)? O Radha! All other milkmaids are like your slaves, and you are the queen amongst than!" (670)

Then Sri Krishna took Radha in his embrance and clasp, where the moonlight was scattered, and the leaves of Jasmine were spread out, where the white flowers were blossoming and the river Jamuna was flowing close by. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet siam as such. The damsel (Radha) was fair-complexioned, and Krishna was having a body, dark in complexion, and it seemed as if the lustre of moon had been encircled by the demon Rahu (ascending mode of moon). (671)

Then Sri Krishna let go Radha in the byelanes of kunj in the forest, enjoying the bliss of her sensuous love, she then joined the group of other milkmaids. The beauty of this scene has been depicted by the poet siam as such, as if the deer, getting loose from the clutches of the lion, went back to join the herd of other deer. (672)

Then joining the group of milkmaids, Sri Krishna started another game of fun and charm. He placed his hand on the hands of Chanderbhaga and left the joy of her company in heart. All the other milkmaids were singing songs which pleased him (Krishna) most. The poet siam has stated that Krishna felt greatly relieved and amused at heart and forgot all about his worries. (673)

Sri Krishna then glanced at Chanderbhaga while dancing with the milkmaids. She laughed and he also smiled, and Krishna said to her, "O Chanderbhaga! I have great love for you. "Radha, seeing all this, thought of herself that Krishna had developed love for another woman, having forgotton her great love and affection. (674)

On seeing Krishna's face again, Radha thought in her mind that now Kishna was in the control of another woman. New she should also feel annoyed with him and all the joy at heart was cast away soon. She felt that Krishna had taken her as inferior to all other milkmaids like Chanderbhaga and Chandermukhi. (675)

Considering these musings in her mind, she thought to herself that Krishna had developed love for other women. Having thought like this, Radha went away to her place leaving this game of love. These thoughts of Radha have been depicted by the poet siam as this thing will spread around among the womenfolk of Brij that Krishna had forgotten Radha totally. (676)

Now the Episode of Radha's Indignation

Swiayya'

The poet siam has stated that saying these words, Radha went away from the kunj by lanes. The same Radha, whose face was shining like moon, and whose body was like gold (shining) and who was most conspicious among the milkmaids, had got annoyed and had got separated from them all. It seemed she was like a deer separated from the herd of deer, and was without any friend. The poet has depicted the scene as if Rati had gone away from her beloved spouse (Kamdev) god of love, being annoyed. (677)

On the other side, while playing there Krishna looked for Radha with great affection. The poet siam has stated that he found her missing, who was most lovable and affectionate to him. The one damsel, whose face was shining like moon, with the body like moon, with the body like gold on, (was missing). Either she had felt sleeply and gone away to her place or she had felt some displeasure at something. (678)

Krishna called the milkmaid, who was called Bijchhata, who was also having a body shining like gold with a face charming like the moonlight. Krishna told her like this, "O friend! Listen to me, and you go to Radha. Go to her and with a sincere request (from me) and professing great love and affection from me, you bring her back by persuading her some how. (679)

On listening to Krishna's words, she went to Radha, who was very good at heart, who was as beautiful as the god of love (Kamdev) and was as beautiful and charning as the lotus petals, to persnade her to come there. The poet has depicted the beauty of the scene just like the brahmani duck (chakvi) getting away from one's clutches. (680)

"Then Radha (Brij woman) replied, "Who is this master of Brij?" Then Bijchhata said, "The same master, who is called Kanha." Then Radha again said, "Which Kanha?" Then Brijchhata again replied, "O dear friend! The same Lord with whom you were playing the game (of love) all this while and whom you love so much." (681)

"O Comrade! Nand Lal (Krishna) has asked you to come there. Do not have any stubborn attitude. I have come all the way to you for this purpose only, so you must accompany me, and agree to my request. You must go to meet Sri Krishna immediately, and it will not cause you any harm. So I would again request you to enjoy yourself (peace of mind) and let others have peace also" (Live and let live). (682)

"O dear Comrade! Do not be proud and get ready to accompany me, accepting my request. Where Kahna plays his flute and the milkmaids are making fun, hurling abuses on each other. That is why. Sri Krishna is deeply in love with you, though I am not aware of it fully." (684)

The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna was playing on his flute at a beautiful spot. "That is why he has asked me to approach you and has told me to rush to you and bring you back alongwith me to the place, where Chanderbhaga was dancing and other dairy maids were singing songs moving around Krishna. So O dear friend! Let us go quickly else the others would be enjoying all the love and fun. (685)

"O dear friend! I am offering myself as a scarifice to you, and requesting you to accompany me quickly, as Nand Lal (Krishna) was calling you (waiting for you). Where Krishna was playing his flute, there the milkmaids were singing together songs of joy and merriment." The poet siam has stated that Krishna was arousing them all, by singing songs in Ragas like Sorath, perfect Malhar and Bilawal etc. What to talk of others, even the gods were coming there (to watch) leaving the heaven of gods. Even if he were to sing songs of joy and merriment, so what? I would not go to that place, even if Brahma himself were to bring his message to deliver it to me. O dear friend! What to say of all others? Even if Krishna himself were to come for calling me, I would not go there even then." (689)

Then the emissary (of Krishna) said to Radha-

Swaiyya'

"O (milkmaid) Radha! Listen. What for are you making so much fuss and annoyance? Whatever Krishna was telling you, you should do that job only. O dear friend! I would commend and request you to perform such functions as would please Sri Krishna. That is why he had sent for you time and again as he had developed great love for you. Otherwise listen to me! Was there no other milkmaid as charming as yourself in this game of love?" (690)

The poet has stated

Swaiyya'

Hearing such words of Bijchhata. Radha was furious with rage, and said, "O woman! Without Kahna's consent, you have dared to become a middle woman between us and are telling me those words (things) which I do not apreciate. So she said in great fury, "You go away. So the emissary (went back) and told Kahna -
Swaiyya'

When Radha gave this reply in a great furious manner, then Bijchhatta came back and told Kahna, "That woman had got annoyed and was stubbornly sitting at home, and inspite of all my requests, that foolish woman was not willing to compromise in any case. She had not agreed to my requests even, nor at my admonishing her. She would not agree even on giving her any gifts or at the cost of her secrets (known to you). What was the use of your loving such a foolish person, who did not appreciate the value of your true love for her?" (693)

Then Mainprabha (another milkmaid) said to Krishna
Swaiyya'

Maniprabha, another milkmaid standing closeby, on hearing the talk of Bijchhata spoke out suddenly, and said to Krishna. "O Krishna! The milkmaid, who has got annoyed with you, I will arrange to bring her back. She paid her respects with folded hands to Krishna, and went away to bring back the annoyed woman". Her beauty was more charming than that of the lotus-flower even. (694)

On bowing to Krishna, with folded hands, she said, "O Sri Krishna! That beautiful woman (Radha) would definitely come back. I will get her for a compromise with you, with all my efforts. I will request her with all the means at my disposal even bowing to her, and by alluring her. I will manage to bring back that beauty. I wll arrange to bring her for a meeting with you today only, and without bringing her back, I will not deserve to be called your own friend." (695)

The poet siam has remarked that after bowing to Sri Krishna, Mainprabha, then left for that place, who was charming than Mandri even, and there could be none like her as beautiful, in the assembly of Indra even. Whose face was looking so glorious, as if all the beauty characteristias of the moon, deer, lion and parrots had borrowed their charm from her only." (696)

In reply, she said

Swaiyya'

Tha Mainprabha, with a face shining like the moon, came to Radha from Krishna and on reaching there, she said, "(O Radha!) I would sacrifice myself to you. Please hurry up, as Krishna had called you." Then Radha replied to her, "I will not go to meet Krishna." Then mainprabha said, "Alas! Do not say this. You must go, forgetting your dual-mindedness. Having (stolen the heart of Mohan) enamoured Krishna, why are you hiding yourself here?" (697)

The place, where dark clouds gather together to cast their shadow; where peacocks were making musical sounds from all the four sides, where milkmaids were dancing, on watching whom many separated ones intend to sacrifice their body even. There, O dear friend! Listen to me, Krishna is reminded of you while playing on his flute. So, O dear friend! Let us go quickly, and perceive his wonderful plays (games) (being played by Krishna). (698)

O dear friend! Do not feel annoyed as such and go to meet Sri Krishna, without having any hesitation, whatsoever. You should think of only love in your mind, without having any stubborn attitude at heart. The poet siam has stated that, she should only think of his praises to watch his playful games only. She further said, "When everyone else was keen to watch Krishna's feats, why are you trying to stay behind due to your obstinancy?" (699)

Then Radha replied, "O dear friend! I will not go to meet Krishna, as I am not keen anymore to watch his feats or gameplays. Krishna had developed his love for other women and had given up his intense love for me. (Who was the other woman?) When replied, "He was in love with Chander Prabha." Then Mainprabha said, "There is no other woman." But Radha said, "I had seen with my own eyes. As such 'I will not go to Krishna. But if you are keen to watch his fun, then you may go." (700)

"O frined! I will not go to meet Krishna, what for you are making these stories as Krishna had not sent you to call me. Infact, from your talk, it appears you are deceitful." If you sit back with a stubborn attitude, you will be only loser, and he will not be at any loss." The youth, which you are so proud about, that charm will go away soon. The youthful charm will desert you soon just as a Yogi moves away by keeping the tiger skin on his shoulders." (708)

"O friend! Listen to me. You possess deer-like eyes and waist like the tiger, while your face is shining like the moon, and even lotus cannot compare with it (in beauty). You are behaving most stubbornly and sitting here; and take it from me, that you will be the only loser. You are being harsh to your beauty only. You will not gain anything by being stubborn towards Sri Krishna!" (709)

After listening to all this talk of the milkmaid, Radha was becoming furious with rage. Twisting her eyes and stretching her eye-brows she was enraged and infuriated. So she told the milkmaid, who had come to persuade her to compromise, "O friend! Why should I go to Krishna? I do not care for him any more! (710)

When Radha spoke like this, then the emissary said, "O Radha! I would take all your worries and problems on my shoulders, please do not be angry. Why are you so much agitated with rage? You are sitting here being annoyed, while Sri Krishna the competitor of moon, (full of charm) was waiting for you. If you do not care for Sri Krishna, then why should he worry and care for you? (711)

After saying like this, the emissary milkmaid said, "Be quick and let us go, so that you could be his companion. His eyes are concentrating on this place only, who is usually enjoying all the pleasures of the world. O dear friend! If you won't go, then he will not be the loser, infact, you will only lose something of your own. O young woman! Both the eyes of Krishna are anxiously waiting to get a glance of your face." (712)

O dear friend! He is not looking at any other woman, but is keenly waiting for your comeback. O young damsel! He is only thinking of you and is stuck up there, or he only talks about you, and sometimes he falls on the ground being dizzy and he could only be supported by you, as he is always immersed in your thoughts. O friend! That moment Sri Krishna remembers you only and even gives up his sensual desires. (713)

"O friend! So do not feel annoyed and make a hasty move. Have no hesitation, in mind. Infact, Sri Krishna is always engrossed in your love, but he is always giving some excuses of his uncomfortable state of mind just to put others off. O young foolish girl! You are sitting back like a fool being annoyed, without appreciating the love of Sri Krishna for you." (714)

After hearing the talk of the milkmaid, Radha prepared herself to reply. "Why have you come all the way to persuade me, being the pleasant company of Sri Krishna? I have already told you that I will not come to meet Krishna. What is your value, even if the Lord would come to request me, even then I would not go. O friend! You are calling others as fools, without realizing that you yourself are behaving like a fool! (715)

On hearing Radha's words, the milkmaid said, "O Radha (milkmaid) ! Listen to me clearly, and make your ears worth listening to my talk. You have just now called me a fool, but think about it in your mind, was I behaving like a fool? Listen, I have been sent by Sri Krishna, whereas you have become stubborn and behaving like it against Krishna only." (716)

You take it from me that this is a perfect truth that Sri Krishna is fully in love with you only. O dear friend! I would bow to you and request you again. Forget about your stubborn attitude, and accept my proposal for a change. So accompany we without any hesitation, leaving your strubbornness, and try to appreciate Sri Krishna's love for you. (717)

"O dear friend! Sri Krishna was playing with you the games of love in the bye-lanes of Kunj, at the times of (gameplay) fun and frolic, and the love he has got for you, is much more than the love he has shown for all other milkmaids. Without your presence Sri Krishna has become withered and does not play any more with the milkmaids. So O dear friend! Listen to me and keeping the fun in mind, do not hesitate any more and let us go quickly. (718)

"O young damsel! Krishna is calling you, so without any obstinancy in mind let us go. You have got annoyed unnecessarily and are sitting here (without purpose), it is sometimes worth while to listen to other's advice as well. That is why, I am talking to you and telling you that you will not lose anything by going there." Then the friend said, Look at me and give a smile, giving up your annoyance." (719)

"He has sent me to this woman, when this milkmaid is getting proud of her beauty. She knows that other milkmaids are not so beautiful, as such she is becoming obstinate and does not budge an inch. The poet siam has stated, that one should look at the foolishness of this milkmaid, who is not afraid of the wrathfulness of Krishna. We are a sacrifice to that Krishna, who is always repeating to bring (call) her back." (722)

If Krishna were to show his love for some other milkmaid, then only this milkmaid (Radha) would realize her mistake. O dear friend, "Without his showing his love for another woman, she is just saying that without accepting our request. "If Sri Krishna were to forget her from his mind, then only she would appreciate the cost of her pride. Then getting irritated she said with impatience "If she agreed to my request then only there is someway out, else there was no other solution." (723)

Then Radha, on hearing these words, said to the emissary, "Krishna had developed love for Chanderbhaga, that is why I am annoyed with him. O dear friend! I am telling you that when I felt greatly agitated over it, then only I got annoyed and came back. O dear friend! The poet Siam has stated, After telling the milkmaid like this, then Radha again said, "O friend! Now please go away. What for are you waiting here? I have already tolerated you enough, alongwith your talk." Then the emissary replied, "O friend! I have talked to you only through love for you but you have not liked my words." Then Radha replied, "O dear friend! I am not coming now because there is no love lost either with me or Krishna for each other." (725)

The poet Siam has stated that hearing these words, the milkmaid said in response keeping Krishna's interest at heart. She thought to herself that she had come here on Krishna's ordains only, and I have wasted much time in getting involved in this mess of persuading this milkmaid. So she said, "O friend! Listen to me! I feel at heart that charming chakor Krishna (Indian red legged partridge) had got enamoured with the moon-like face of Radha, and belonged to you only). (726)

Radha then said

Swaiyya'

"O milkmaid! If he was waiting to see my face, so what? I have already said that I will not go to meet him. Why should I get other's blame? I will feel satisfied with my own spouse only. Sri Krishna was enjoying the company of other women, so what praise shall I get by going to him? So O dear friend! You may now go back. Now I will not show my face to Sri Krishna, so long as I am alive. (727)

Instead of sending anyother milkmaid, Sri Krishna rushed personally to meet her. On seeing his face only. Radha felt greatly relieved. In her heart she felt very happy and satisfied but out-wardly showed her annoyance and said, "Why have you come here? Why do you not love Chanderbhaga only?" (729)

Swaiyya'

"O dear friend! I have the greatest love for you alone and have not the least attraction for anyone else. When you are standing there I only glance at you, while in your absence, I am watching your shadow only. Saying this Krishna held Radha's arm (and said) come with me to the forest, where we will enjoy great fun and satisfaction. Please come with me, else you will swear by me, my oath (or my like). "Then Radha said, "No, dear, not on your oath. I cannot swear on your life, I will come." (733)

Saying thus Kahna held the arm of Radha, and he was hailing the enjoyment of all the three worlds whose waist was like the lion, and even millions of moons cannot (compare) match his beauty, Then he said, "You come with me," Who has enamoured all the milkmaids. Then Radha said, "Why are you beseeching me like this? O dear, listen. Whatever is in your mind, I have gauged it fully. (734)

Then Krishna said, "O dear friend! Why are you taunting me? I have got immense love for you. You are unnecessarily having doubt in your mind, as I have no special liking for Chanderbhaga in my heart. So get up and forgetting all grievances, let us go to the banks of Jamuna for playing games (of love)." But the Obstinate Radha does not agree, while Krishna was suffering from the pangs of separation and made earnest appeals like a person in great pain with separation. (735)

Then he said, O friend! Now leave your annoyance and let us both proceed to the forest. You are getting remorseful for nothing as I have no place (in my heart) for any other woman. O darling! So you listen to me with great elation (joy). Let us throw away all our afflictions on the banks of the river. There is nothing more appealing than to enjoy sensual pleasure, so as to dispel the ego of the god of love even." (736)

Krishna had told this thing to Radha, being under the spell of sexual pleasure (love) and Radha agreed to his proposal and dispelling her annoyance she accompanied him. Then holding her arm in his hands, Krishna then said to her. "O Radha, come on and let us play game of love." Then Krishna told to Radha, "O my darling! Play the game of love with me." (737)

Then Radha told Krishna -

Swaiyya'

On hearing such loving words from Krishna, Radha answered, "O Krishna! Go and talk to her with whom you have developed great love. Why are you holding my arm and giving me mental affliction? After saying these words, Radha's eyes were filled with tears and she heaved a sigh with painful breath." (738)

(Then she added)", Go and play the game of love with her with whom your heart is so much attached. "Then heaving a great sigh with tearful eyes Radha said, "I will not go with you even if you kill me with your weapons. I am telling you the truth, O Krishna! Please leave me alone and go away." O friend ! Please get up and accompany me dispelling all your annoyance. I have come to you without any doubts having left other friends, from this only you should realise my love for you. O friend! Listen to the talk of love with full attention (with your ears). One should be prepared to sell off oneself when the friend offers his whole self in sale off (provided the love gets satisfied). So I would beseech you, "O dear friend! Please accept my word and accept my proposal without any dithering." (740)

Then Radha said,

Swaiyya'

On hearing these words of Krishna, Radha replied to him, "Your love for me does not exist any more, and saying this her eyes were filled with tears. You have loved only Chanderbhaga which has agitated my mind greatly and enraged me." The poet siam has stated, saying these words, she heaved a deep sigh (of pain), as she was a great expert at deception. (741)

Fully agitated and enraged Radha spoke from her beautiful face. "There is no love lost for me in your heart." The poet siam has stated, "Tell me, how any love is left for me in your heart?" The Krishna replied, "My love remains intact for you alone." In reply, the infuriated Radha said, "Tell me, how could you vouch for your love for me?" Then Krishna said, "O damsel! Listen to me. I have enjoyed sensual pleasure with you alone in the forest, (so this only proves my love for you alone)." (742)

Then Krishna told Radha

Swaiyya'

O dear friend! I am fully enamoured with your gait. I am fully endeared to you with your bewitching eyes, even your tresses (of hair) have enamoured me, and now I cannot go back leaving all these things behind. I am completely enamoured with your body and this has enhanced my love for you. By seeing your countenance I am totally captivated just as a flock of partridges continues to gaze at moon beseechingly." (743)

So "O darling! Now forget about your displeasure and get up soon to accompany me. O dear friend! I have the deepest love for you and talk to me, without any feeling of anguish. I am telling you about your protest of displeasure, which is of a very low order and does not behove you at all. So listen to my appeal and come with me. When Krishna made such requests beseechingly then that woman (Radha) accepted his appeal in her mind to some extent, and realising Krishna's love for her, she finally gave up all her doubts and misgivings. She, who was the queen among woman-folk, then started giving her reply like this. She gave up her dual-mindedness and talking lovingly to Sri Krishna, she felt herself near to his heart in love. (745)

She said, "You are telling me to accompany you. I know that you could be won over by my loving behaviour towards you. You will take me alongwith you as your only companion, but I know fully well that you will get stuck up with another milkmaid on the way. O Krishna! I shall not accept defeat from you on any score. You will accept defeat from me on any score. You will only feel defeated (helpless) before me. You will take me to those bye-lanes which I know not fully. I am telling you the truth that you would do as it suits you, after taking me there." (746)

The poet siam has stated that Radha, who was fully endeared to Sri Krishna in her love, said with a laugh, O Sri Krishna! "That moment her teeth were shining beautifully, and the poet has described the praise of her beautiful teeth like this. As if the flash of lightning among the dark clouds even, had been put to shame before the beauty of her teeth. (747)

The poet siam has stated that Radha, who was fully enamoured in the love of Sri Krishna, was pleased much in her heart when she had accepted the whole proposal of Sri Krishna. Then she had said to Sri Krishna, that they will play in the bye-lanes, and she had agreed to this proposal. Thus she had laughed and without any hesitation had agreed to his proposal, giving up all her doubts and dual-mindedness. (748)

When both were engaged in their talk, then their merriment and happiness had reached its peak. Then, with a smile, Krishna hugged dear Radha and with great sensual desire he took her in his embrace with great force. Thus her garment string gave way and the blouse got torn and the necklace around the neck got broken so that the pearls fell down on the ground. It appears that on meeting her beloved, the woman's fire of separation had produced some embers from her burning bosom. (749)

The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna, being fully satisfied and amused in heart, had proceeded to the jungle alongwith Radha. By playing the game of love in the byelanes, he forgot all the pangs of separation from the heart. The same episode has been sung by sukhdev either in the world or in his mind. Whosoever hears this episode, gets delighted and its praises are known all over the world. (750)

Then Sri Krishna told Radha-

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna told Radha, "You will swim in Jamuna and I would try to catch hold of you while swimming. "We will play the game of love in the water and details of the game, I will tell you only there. Because wherever I am going, all the women of Brij are trying to catch a glimpse of mine with wistful eyes. But these milkmaids will not be able to reach there (in the water) and we will enjoy lot of fun there." (751)

When Radha heard the talk of Krishna about swimming in water, then she had lot of praise for Sri Krishna and immediately jumped into the river, and Sri Krishna followed her and jumped into the water. Seeing this scene, the poet has felt an inkling of praise like this. It appears as if the woman from Brij was like a water hen, and Krishna had swooped on her like a hawk (to devour her). (752)

Then Sri Krishna forcing himself in the waters, caught hold of Radha immediately. On a touch of Sri Krishna's body, she felt greatly tempted with sensual love and her doubts and annoyance vanished like water. The joy of her heart swelled further, which has been described by the poet as such. Whosoever had seen the couple, were feeling elated with joy, infact even the river Jamna was feeling its joy (on perceiving them). (753)

Then the poet siam has stated that after taking out the milkmaid (Radha) from the river, Krishna played the drama of love and feeling greatly delighted, Radha started singing in the drama. Then joined by the women of Brij Sri Krishna played a tune in the Sarang Raga (on the flute). Hearing this tune, the deer came running (towards it) and the milkmaids also enjoyed the fun with great eclat. (754)

Couplet

This episode was written with full satisfaction in the year (Bikrami) Samvat 1745. If there are found any shortcomings (in its preparation) then the poets could improve upon it accordingly. (755)

"O Lord of the Universe! I pray to you beseechingly with folded hands. May my head always rest at Your lotus feet with the thoughts of a slave of Yours! (756)

Now the description of the Sudarshan from the life of a snake begins

Swaiyya

The day of the worship of the god, whom the milkmaids serve with great affection and reverance approached. The poet siam has stated that the goddess, who had killed demons like Shumb and Nishumbh was the mother of the whole world without any doubt or reservation. Those persons, who had not served her, due to wrathfulness in their heart, had been destroyed. To worship the same goddess, all the milkmen and milkmaids, had left for the place, leaving their own town. (757)

The goddess, who is known to possess eight arms, well known to the world, as a destroyer of the (demon) Shumbh. The poet siam has stated that the goddess, who alleviates the sufferings of her saints, and is not afraid of anyone, whose praisses were being sung in all the seven skies (heavens) and seven under worlds (netherlands), her day of worship had approached, and all the milkmaids, with loving faith in their hearts, had statred for the purpose. They had started for offering prayers (worship of) to the great Rudra and goddess Chandi. Jasodha also alongwith other women, Balram and Krishna, departed alongwith them. (759)

Swaiyya'

All the milkmen, with great eclat and delight had left their town for the worship. They had offered rice, incense, sweet pudding (of flour, ghee and sugar) and lamps to the (goddess) Chandi and Shiva. They were feeling greatly delighted and relieved of all their afflictions. The poet siam has stated, the great god fortune of the milkmen was being tested now. (760)

One snake had devoured Nand (Kahna's father), without leaving any part of the body (outside). The snake was dark black like the ebonite tree. He had stung him with great force and ferocious wrath. All the people of the town were striking (the cobra) with their feet, as a result of which he would shake the body (of Nand) with violent jerk. When all had got tired and felt helpless, they went to Sri Krishna with wailings and request. (761)

All the milkmen jointly were wailing and then said, "O Balram's brother, Krishna! O Destroyer of all our sufferings! Pray come and kill the demon. All were crying like this. Nand also remarked that he had been grasped by a black cobra, who is not (releasing) leaving me now. We are all crying, so please arrange some means to kill him. Just as a physician is called when someone is suffering with some ailment, similarly we are faced with a calamity, we need to call for the support of a warrior. (762)

Sri Krishna on hearing his father's words, cut the cobra into two pieces. He (cobra) left the body of the snake and transformed himself in the form of a beautiful human being. The poet has described the beauty of this person, praising his smart appearance as such. It appeared as if, due to some virtuous deeds, the moon had been snatched away from the demon (Rehu), by throwing away the enemy at a distance. (763)

Then that person became a brahmin, and was called Sudarshna. Krishna then laughed and told him, "O man! Tell me where do you (belong) come from?" He then (brahmin) lowered his eyes and feeling a sense of happiness at heart, with folded hands, bowed to Krishna in reverance. The poet siam has stated that (he bowed to the Lord), who was bestowing all benedictions to the mankind, was destroyer of one's sufferings and the master of both the worlds. (764)

"Due to his curse, I had become a black snake (cobra) from a brahmin. O Sri Krishna! Now with a touch of your body (with me), all the sins of my body have vanished." (765)

All the milkmaids then started worshipping the godly mother (goddess) and after their (worship) prayers, they had come back to their homes. With the impact of Sri Krishna's episode on their mind, all of them joined in singing the praises of Sri Krishna. Then Sri Krishna played on his flute various tunes in Ragas like Sorath, Sarang, perfect Malhar and Bilawal. On hearing these Ragas all the residents of Brij became delighted and whosoever heard these tunes, got elated with joy. (766)

Swaiyya'

After having their food from the mother Jasodha, both the warriors went to sleep on the fall of night. There the demon Brikhbhasur, whose both the horns were touching the sky, was standing. On perceiving him, getting furious with rage, Krishna, with great strength, took hold of him with both his hands. (768)

By holding his horns, Krishna threw him down, who fell down about eighteen feet away. He again got up with great rage and started fighting with Krishna, coming closer to him. Krishna again threw him down with force, and no one knows where he fell down, but he was not seen alive again. Neither he came back to fight nor he died; Rather with the touch of Sri Krishna's hands he had attained his Salvation. (769)

By engaging himself in a great fight, Sri Krishna had killed the enemy. Then Narad came to Mathura town and while talking to Kans, said like this. "O Kans! Your sister's husband (brother-in-law) had kidnapped the daughter of Nand (and brought her in the prison) while, taking away your enemy to Nand's house. He has (Krishna) killed the demons like Aghasur and Bakasur, the great warriors, when they gave up their courage. (770)

Then in reply, Kans said

Swaiyya'

The king of Mathura was killed with great fury and started worrying about Krishna, as to how to kill him. He felt that there was no other job as important and it was necessary to kill him, thus saving himself from any harm. Then Narad laughed and said, "O King! You should do this job soon, which was stated that Narad gave his suggestion that the enemy should be killed either with strength or with deceit (but it was essential to kill him). (771)

Then sending for Akroor the king said, "Take my Chariot and go to Gokal (Nandpur) and inform them that there is a Yagna being organised at my place. So by talking like this, arrange to bring Krishna alongwith you. (774)

Then Kans told Akroor with great fury and pride, "Go to Gokul and tell them that there is a Yagna being performed at my place. By saying such words, manage some how to bring them here by inducing them. The poet has described the beauty of all this arrangement like this, as if a deer, destined to death, had invited the lion to his place." (775)

Swaiyya'

As the day dawned, the great enemy left for his destination and came there in the guise of a huge horse, on perceiving whom even the sun got frightened and (the god) Indra was also filled with lot of fear. On seeing him all the milkmen got filled with fear, and placed their heads at the feet of Sri Krishna. Then Krishna started waging a war against him being infuriated with rage, which brought great relief to the milkmen. (777)

When the enemy also got furious with rage in his heart, he struck Krishna with his leg, but Krishna managed to escape the effect of this (leg) strike and saved his body with great skill. Then Krishna managed to hold him by his feet without giving him any close approach and threw him away at a distance. Just as an urchin throws away a stone, in the same manner Krishna had thrown him away, and he had fallen at a distance of four hundred steps away. (778)

Then gathering his strength, the enemy, with his mouth open, again attacked Krishna. He made his eyes looking horrible, with which even the gods got frightened. Then Krishna forced his hand inside his mouth. The scene of this incident has been praised by the poet like this. It appeared as if the hand of Kahna, like the god of death, had been forced into Kaisi's body to take out his very life. (779)

When he bit Krishna's arm with his teeth, all his teeth got extracted (came out). The teeth, which had planned to bite the arm, were completely melted like the hailstorm. Then that Kaisi in trying to fight it out, fell down on the ground and could not return home after that (he fell dead). Since he had died because of Krishna's touch (with hand) all his sins were destroyed then. (780)

The way he had killed Ravana and the means adopted by Krishna in killing the (demon) Narkasur, just as Narsing, in protecting Prahlad, had killed Harnakush so that he could not live any more; or just as Krishna had killed Madh and Kaitab with his wheel in hand and by inhaling the fire, had removed the fright (fear) of the Brij residents. In the same manner, Krishna for protecting the saints, had shown his prowess, in defeating the designs of Kaisi. (781)

After killing his great enemy, Krishna alongwith his cows, went away to the jungle. Having alleviated the afflictions from the minds of all people, Krishna had brought cheer and joy to all the people there. Then the poet siam has described the praises of this beautiful scene like this. It appeared, as if the lion had killed with deceit, the greatest deer among the flock of deer by signalling him out. Then Narad walked to meet the warrior Krishna, as if a hungry and thirsty person had desired to satiate his hunger. Then the Muni (Narad) came and bowed to Sri Krishna and sat there and spoke out his mind, coming nearer to him. (783)

The muni (ascetic) Narad told to Krishna-

Swaiyya'

Before the arrival of Akroor, by bowing to Sri Krishna, the muni said to him. By perceiving the beautiful body of Krishna, the Muni was greatly pleased and impressed at heart. "May you kill many worriors in the battle field", saying like this the Muni praised the prowess of Krishna and got encouraged to add, "That he had gathered together many enemies at one place which he could kill like a hunter as a game. Sri Krishna had organised a great play with the milkmen in the land of Brij. Then the demon Bisvasur, seeing the (children) milkmen playing, assumed the form of a thief and joined them to devour some children. He managed to steal away (kidnap) many children from there, when suddenly turning around Sri Krishna saw him. So Krishna rushed towards him and held him by his neck and with great force threw him down on the ground. (788)

Couplet

After killing Bisvasur demon, and helping the saints, Krishna, alongwith Balram and other milkmen's children, came back home at night. (789)

Here the chapter on the killing of demon Bisvasur forming part of the episode of Krishnavtar in Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now Akroor takes Krishna to Mathura.

Swaiyya'

When Krishna came home after killing the enemy, then Akroor had reached there from somewhere. On seeing Krishna, he made his obeisance to Krishna and was very happy in his heart. Whatever Kans had told him was related to Krishna by him and with his loving request he made Krishna feel very much delighted. Just as the elephant is directed as desired with the help of iron rod, he managed to woo Krishna (with his designs). (790)

On seeing Krishna's body, Nand asked him if he was feeling all right and fully safe and sound. Then Balram said, "What could be the safety, when the king had sent for Krishna?" (791)

Now the episode of Krishna's arrival in Mathura begins.

Swaiyya'

On hearing the words of Akroor, Sri Krishna, alongwith the children of milkmen, left for Mathura. For offering to the king, taking many goats and lot of milk alongwith them, Krishna and Balram started at the head (of this cavalcade). On perceiving him (Krishna) one feels peace at heart, and one's sins take to their heels. It appeared as if Krishna was looking like a lion in the beautiful forest of the milkmen. (792)

Is there anyone, who could tell the king at his face, with strong resolve (against it) about his not coming there?" filled with grief, Jasodha fell down unconscious on the ground, and could not utter a word. (794)

(She was saying to herself) "When I had kept (sustained) in my womb for twelve months and it wa hardly thirteen months, since he was born. From that time onwards, I had made Krishna grow up with great care and he was called the brother of Balram. Now the king had sent for him either for some special task, or had (called him) considering him the son of Basudev. But Krishna could not stay at our ill-fated home." (795)

Now the episode of separation (Natak) begins.

When the milkmaids heard the news of Krishna having gone (to Mathura), then the milkmaids' eyes were filled with tears. They got worried in their minds (about Krishna's safety) and all their happiness and merriment was gone. Whatever beauty or charm of youth they possessed, got burnt in the pyre of painful afflictions. They could not utter even a single word, as their heart was glued to the love of Kahna. (797)

The poet siam has stated, "With whom the most charming milkmaids used to play games with great love and affection. In the games of love, whose body used to shine greatly just like the flash of lightning during the month of Savan (during monsoon). Whose body was shining like gold and the countenance was like the moon and whose eyes were praisesworthy like the lotus flower and whose gait was like an elephant (drunken). O friends, listen, That Krishna had left his house and gone to Mathura." (800)

The most beautiful milkmaids, with lotus like faces and gold like bodies, having developed love for Krishna, were now crying and wailing (in his separation). Their hearts were filled with pangs (of separation), and their happiness had gone with the wind. O friend, Listen! They were saying that Krishna had deserted them and gone away. Krishna himself had gone to Mathura, but he does not realise the suffering caused to us (other's suffering). (801)

We will now dress up with saffron coloured clothes, holding begging bowls in hands, and will grow tufts of matted hour on the head, and will be satiated by asking in alms the picture of Krishna only. We will also go to the same place, where Sri Krishna had gone. We will all leave our homes and become ascetic women (yognis) as a group." (802)

The milkmaids were talking among themselves, "O friend! We will now act like this only. We will leave the homes, and hold begging bowls in hand with matted hair grown on the head." Someone else said, "We will take poison to end this life, or drown myself or burn myself in fire (immolate myself)." All the milkmaids with the pangs of separation at heart, were saying that they would not (deter) falter from going alongwith Krishna. (803)

"Krishna, who had given us lot of sensuous pleasure and had borne the jeers of public because of his love for us and who had destroyed the demons even due to his love for us, and who had alleviated the sufferings of milkmaids, has now left for Mathura, leaving us in the lurch, being forgetful of our love, that is what we hear." (804)

"We will wear ear-rings in the ears and wear saffron coloured clothes, and with begging bowls in hands, we will smear our bodies with ash. We will tie staghorn trumpets with our waist, and being Krishna's (followers) female ascetics we will worship Gorakhnath by singing his praises, (like his followers)." (805)

Even someone was heard saying that either they would take poison themselves. We will pierce a knife in the body and the sin of this suicide attempt would be placed on Krishna, or else we will go to Brahma's presence and lament about the affliction inflicted on us by Krishna. The milkmaids were saying that they would not allow Krishna to leave the Brij town. (806)

We will wear rosary of black wood around our necks and tie the packs of (purses of) ashes around our waist. Then we will burn the incense before him by holding a trident in hand (or a pick axe). The poet siam has stated that they would pound the hemp of his meditation and then offer him to drink. The milkmaids were saying that they would not stay at their homes (without Krishna's presence there) and would follow Krishna like ascetics (female). (807)

"Infront of his house we will burn and ignite a pile of chaff (fumigation) and will not do any other work. Else we will meditate on him and after taking the intoxicating hemp of his meditation, we will become drunk, and then taking the dust of his lotus-feet we will rub it on our forehead as a religious act (apply as biphoot). Due to their love for Krishna the milkmaids were saying that they would become female ascetics (jognas). (808)

The poet has stated that they would make a necklace of the beads of their heart (mind) and then meditate on his name or they would try to enamour Krishna by doing acts of penance like this. "By joining together we would request him for a favour and by touching his feet, we would gain those favours from him." The milkmaids were thinking in terms of leaving their homes and becoming female hermits. (809)

All the womenfolk were standing together at a point just as flock of deer gets stunned (charmed) at one place on hearing the sound of a special drum. The poet siam has stated that at times the milkmaids would cast away Krishna's fear, being enticed by the Krishna's love. On doing meditation, they close their eyes (without opening them), as they knew by opening their eyes, Sri Krishna would disappear from their thoughts immediately. On seeing this beautiful sight, the poet has praised it just as a wounded person, lying in the battle field, tries to open his eyes or shut them in turn (thinking of the horrible fate). (810)

The milkmaids, having bodies shining like gold, and having faces (shining) beautiful like moon, whose eyesbrows were like a bow, and their eyes were like arrows, which were sharpened on the grinding stone of sensual love, by seeing which one gets delighted, while without its presence one feels dejected. It appeared as if without Krishna's presence the lotus flower, though present in water, would wither inside due to (his) separation. (811)

By riding on the chariot, all the milkmaids urchins, alongwith Krishna, had gone towards Mathura, and the milkmaids remained at homes, and were feeling depressed at heart. Both the brothers came to the place, where the milkmaids were standing and waiting there. Their faces were shining like the moon and their bodies were resplendent like gold. (812)

As soon as the cavalcade of people, alongwith Akroor reached the banks of the river Jamuna, Akroor felt in his mind a sense of guilt (worry) that (as if) he was committing a great sin. Immediately Akroor, leaving the chariot, went into the waters (of Jamuna) to offer his evening prayers. Akroor felt in his mind a fear, while in water, that the mighty Kans would get Krishna killed (for which he would be reponsible). (813)

When Akroor thought in his mind about Krishna's killing (at the hands of Kans) while having bath in Jamna, then Krishna appeared before him (in his thoughts) in person. (814)

Swaiyya'

Akroor saw Krishna having a thousand heads, with ten thousands arms, being seated on the hood of (cobra) Shesh-nag, having worn shining yellow coloured clothes, with a revolving wheel in hand, while in the other hand he was having the (Nadang) sword looking glorious. He had appeared in the waters of Jamuna, as it was his moral duty, to dispel the fear of his disciples (saints). The Lord, who had created the whole world, and perceiving Him in the form of Krishna, even the clouds of monsoon (sa'van) were feeling ashamed (belittled). (815)

Thus Akroor, feeling greatly relievered, coming out of water, took Krishna towards Mathura and was greatly delighted at heart. Taking the chariot at full speed, he went to the kingdom of Kans, and had no doubt or fear about the killing of Krishna (at the hands of Kans) now and was not worried at all. To see the beauty of Krishna, the whole populace of Mathura had turned up. If someone had any (suffering) affliction of the body, it was alleviated by perceiving Krishna's charm. (816)

All the womenfolk of Mathura turned up in large numbers on hearing the news of Krishna's arrival, the women reached the spot from where Krishna was coming riding in the chariot, and seeing his beautiful face all of them were feeling happy, and their attention was fixed on seeing his countenance. The poet forgot all about the pangs of separation of milkmaids (at Brij) on seeing the beauty of Krishna's arrival in Mathura. (817)

Sri Krishna was coming on his way to Mathura, when a washerman of the enemy met him, and Krishna took some clothes from him, then with a furious rage, he (washerman) repeated the name of the king Kans. Sri Krishna then felt infuriated with rage and struck him with his finger (at the face) so that he fell down on the ground with such a force just as the washerman splashes the clothes on the wooden plank. (820)

All the milkmen then told Sri Krishna that he should give such a beating to the washerman, and they should loot all the clothes from the washerman. (821)

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna told the washer-woman that she should marry Chaturbhy (get all worldly things) and remain always happy and satisfied. As soon as Sri Krishna said these words, she attained all the fruits of Amrapur (She got all the blessings of the world). The great men after giving away many valuables even, feel ashamed (feel belittled), as this is in circulation in the worldly (formal) practices. Sri Krishna had bowed his head, feeling at heart, that he had given her very little in return for her assistance (in wearing those clothes). (824)

Now the salvation of the gardener

Couplet

After striking the washerman and bestowing his blessings on the washer woman, (giving salvation) Sri Krishna made the chariot move faster and came towards the, palace of the king (Kans). (825)

Swaiyya'

Then a gardener met Sri Krishna on the way, who garlanded Sri Krishna with a garland of flowers (around his neck) and bowed a number of times to Sri Krishna, and taking him home (gave) served Sri Krishna with food. On feeling happy and satiated Sri Krishna asked the gardener to ask for some favours (blessings). He had thought in his mind of asking for the company of holy saints, and Sri Krishna had already known (realised) his inner feelings and straightaway blessed him with such a favour. (826)

Here the epidose of giving salvation to the gardener is completed
Now the episode of favouring the hench woman begins
Swaiyya'

When Sri Krishna was proceeding further, he was met by Kubija (hench woman), so she saw the charming form of Sri Krishna, in fact she was going to the king, taking with her aromatic flowers for him; she felt (thought) in her mind that she would apply that scerf to this beautiful personality. When Krishna realized that this woman was keenly in love for him, then he said (like this), "O Woman! Come and apply that scerf to me" The poet has described the beauty of the scene like this. (828)

Accepting the order of Sri Krishna, the woman applied the sandal wood (which was meant for the king) to the body of Krishna. The poet siam has described, on seeing the charming face of Sri Krishna, she felt the bliss of life in her heart. Even Brahma had developed love for Krishna in his heart and sang his praises for many days, but even he could not gauge his greatness or his limits. This gardener (woman) was very fortunate, who had the opportunity to touch the body of Sri Krishna. (829)

Then Sri Krishnna placed one foot on her feet (of hench woman) and held with his hands the hands of the woman and by pulling her, the hench (back) of the woman was straightened. Who else possesses the same strength (of straightening someone) in the whole world, except the one who had killed the warrior (demon) Bakasur, now he will destroy the king of Mathura (Kans). This hench woman was really lucky, whose treatment Sri Krishna, being a physician, had done himself. (830)

Then in response to Krishna's action, she said, "O Lord! Pray come to my house. The (hench woman) was greatly pleased by seeing Krishna's face and said without having any fear of the king. Realizing that she was greatly in love with Krishna so, he told her with great deceitful manner, "Let me first kill the mighty Kans with great power, then I would fulfil your desire also." (831)

After completing Kubeja's (hence woman) work then Krishna got busy in watching the town. He rushed to the spot where the King's beautiful bows were kept, and started watching them. On the courtier's refusal to show those bows, Krishna got infuriated with rage, so he took hold of a bow and stretched it with great force, as a result the King's bow was broken. (832)

Krishna, in great wrathfulness, had stretched the bow and stood firmly at that spot, and it appeared as if a powerful lion, with eyes (opened) aghast, was standing there, whosoever saw him, fell down on the ground, with great awe. On seeing him, even Indra got frightened, and Brahma was also overwhelmed with fear, even Chitar Gupt who keeps the accounts of all human beings, got frieghtened. The poet siam has stated that Krishna, with the broken pieces of the bow, which were very sharp. Krishna was killing the warriors, who came to resist him. (833)

The poet has stated -

By taking the pieces of the bow in hand Sri Krishna was going on killing great (enemy) warriors. Then the King's great warriors also jumped into the fray, as they also felt greatly agitated with rage. Sri Krishna started killing them all, as he was fully engrossed in the pleasure and joy of a battle. At that place there was a great hue and cry, on hearing which even Shiva left his meditation posture and fled away from there. (835)

Kabit

The Lord (Master) of the three worlds, (Sri Krishna) was engaged in a great battle, being infuriated with rage, where many warriors lay dead (being killed). The warriors had fallen dead there in large numbers just as a carpenter fells many trees and they lie huddled together. All of them (warriors) were unconscious and could not hold the swords in hand. A great rivulet had erupted there (had started flowing); where the heads of great warriors were lying huddled like stones, and in the stream of blood the swords were protruding like the octopus in water. There Shiva also came riding his white bull, alongwith Parbati Gori and Rudra also (in their glory) but they were all smeared with blood stains. (836)

Fully enraged, Krishna and Balram had waged such a battle (of fury) that all the warriors had fled away and not a single warrior (worth its name) was left there. The warriors killed with the pieces of bow, were lying reclining on the ground as if the great army of the king Kans was lying asleep there. Some of them, gaining consciousness, were seen running away from there, while some others again got engrossed in waging the war. Krishna, infuriated like the jungle fire, had challenged them all. The blood stains from the elephants trunks were seen just as the sky had become red in its pristine glory. (837)

Piercing through the army of warriors, both the brothers, with the pieces of bow, had killed many of them and only those could save themselves who fled away, and those who fought again, got slain. The varied coloured army, lay killed there after fighting, while streams of blood were flowing around. The poet has praised the beauty of the scene like this, as if the battle-field was decorated with different types of ornaments. (839)

Both the brothers waged a war with great fury and killed many of the enemy warriors. The warriors, who were young (in age), and had come with new weapons, had fallen down on the battle field very soon, and were appearing beautiful. Their beauty has been described by the poet as if the battle field was presented with oranments. (840)

All the courtiers, on listening to the king's talk got up and started doing as ordered. They made a separate place for the battle field and on the gate, they made Kavalia'pir (elephant) to stand guard. Both the wrestlers were standing there, where the enemy had many warriors collected, which would cause the enemy to Shudder (to perspire). After preparing this battle ground, a messenger was sent to Krishna's place to call him there. (844)

After bringing the two (brothers) the courtier came to the King's palace, and said, "This is the King's palace." So all the milkmen bowed their heads. Proceeding further they saw a great elephant standing there, and asked him (courtier) to keep the elephant aside but the rider (driver of elephant) made the elephant infuricated (agitated) and the elephant jumped at Krishna, as if the sin had attacked the virtue. (845)

The infuriated elephant then picked up both the warriors (Krishna and Balram) in his trunk and trumpted like the roaring clouds for which there can be no other description (of praise). The poet siam has stated. The killer of the enemy (Krishna) slipped underneth the body of the elephant and the beauty of the scene appeared to the poet's mind, as if both the brothers were playing there. (846)

Now the episode of the battle against Chandoor and Musat begins

Swaiyya'

After uprooting the tusks of the elephant, he kept them on his shoulders, and both the brothers proceeded to the battle field (arena). All the wrestlers saw Krishna in the form of a great wrestler and felt him as superior to them as a wrestler, where the saints saw in him the Lord creator of the universe and also felt that there was none greater than him. The father only saw his son in him whereas Kans felt in his mind as if he was the destroyer of his whole dynasty. (848)

Then the king, seated in his royal assembly made the wrestlers battle it out with Krishna. Balram fought against the wrestler Musat while Krishna fought against the wrestler Chandoor. When Krishna felt infuriated with rage, then Chandoor fell down in the battle field (arena). It did not take long when both of them had killed the two wrestlers, who were lying fallen on the ground. (849)

Here the chapter of Krishna of Bachittar Natak from Dasam Granth, dealing with the death of the wrestlers Chandoor and Musat is completed.

Now the episode of the killing of Kans begins

Swaiyya'

When the two brothers had killed both the enemy warriors, the king got greatly agitated in his mind. He said, "O my warriors! Kill both of them in the battle field." He roared like this and made great noise. That moment Krishna started the battle with great destruction, without any fear at heart. Whosoever attacked Krishna, was dropped down dead by the strikes of Krishna, with his fists (or killed him instantaneously). (850)

Then Krishna jumped in the battlefield and put his foot down near the place, where the King was seated. Kans also became furious and took out his shield, while brandishing his Sword and made a surprise attack on Krishna with the sword, but Krishna moved aside, thus saving himself from his strike. Then holding the enemy from his hair Krishna threw him down on the ground. (851)

First of all, Krishna threw him down by holding his legs, he dragged Kans on the ground. After killing the King, both (the brothers) felt greatly relieved and delighted at heart, and there was an uproar in the town. The poet siam has stated, "Look at the mighty power of Krishna, who had saved the honour of the saints by killing all the enemies. Infact, he had cut away all the chains binding his father Basudev, in body and mind. Thus he got applauded in the whole world. (852)

After killing the enemy, Krishna came to the bathing place of Basrat't. The warriors of Kans, who used to stay there, got greatly enraged on seeing Krishna there. They could not control themselves and started fighting against themselves and started fighting against Krishna. Then Krishna, picking up greater courage, killed all of them, thus throwing them down on the ground. (853)

Krishna had fought against the elephant with great fury, without moving an inch from his position due to fear etc. and then had killed both the wrestlers in the battlefield. The poet siam has stated that he was fighting there for about three hours (one pehar), and after killing Kans went to the banks of Jamuna, and all the warriors of Kans went to the banks of Jamuna, and all the warriors of Kans who tried to fight against him, were killed. To save the honour of saints, he had killed all the (warriors) enemies, so there was a shower (rain) of flowers (stream of) from the heavens on his success. (854)

Now the episode of the wife of Kans meeting Krishna begins

The princess (the daughter of Raja Jarasandh feeling the great calamity at heart of Kan's death) left her palace and came to meet Sri Krishn. Coming there she raised a huge hue and cry and related the whole story of her sufferings. She removed her covering of the head and smeared her hair with ash. She was hugging the dead body of her husband and seeing all this Sri Krishna lowered his (neck) head in despair (shame). (855)

After performing the last ceremony of the enemy Sri Krishna then went to meet his parents. The mother and father, without having any inkling of worldly love, bowed to the two sons. The parents realized them as the representatives of the Lord only but Sri Krishna then arranged to enhance their worldly love (within the heart) and then Sri Krishna made obeisance to them, and got their fetters (chains) removed. (856)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar from the Bachittar Natak Granth of Dasam Sakand Puran, dealing with the episode of setting free (Krishna's) parents from captivity after the last rites of Kans is completed.

Then Kahna told Nand -

Swaiyya'

After moving form there Krishna came back home and requested Nand in many ways that he was the son of Basudev, and Nand then accepted his words. Sri Krishna told them all to go back to their homes. On hearing these words the populace of Brij Town felt great love for him but Krishna explained to them whatever he had told Nand. So as a result of this Brijpuri became bereft of Krishna (without him) now. (857)

Including Nand, all the people, bowing their heads, went back to Brij, and felt great pain at heart for his loss. They felt greatly bereaved just as one feels at the loss of a dear one or one had lost one's dear brother. Or just as a king feels humiliated at his defeat at the hands of another king in the battle-field. The poet has described the beauty of the scene as if the cheat Basudev had looted shiam (Krishna) from Nand (wih deceit). (858)

Then Nand told his people -
Couplet

Nand came back to Bripuri and described the story (episode) of Krishna. Hearing this news, all the people felt aggrieved, and the mother Jasodha started crying and wailing. (859)

Jasodha said -
Swaiyya'

The poet siam has stated that (Krishna) whom we had obtained as a blessing after great penance and with prayers (by bowing) to the Lord. O dear friend! Listen. That son has been snatched away from us by the residents of the town. (860)

The wailings of the milkmaids

Swaiyya'

Hearing this news from Jasodha, all the milkmaids gathered together, and showed their grief and sorrow by collecting together. They got rid of all their happiness and elation, and went into meditation, by thinking of Sri Krishna in the mind (by concentrating on Krishna). They fell down unconscious on the ground and perspiration was flowing from the bodies. All were heaving sighs (of pain and sorrow) and their whole body felt being rid of all worldly pleasures. (861)

The poet siam has described, all the milkmaids, in great sorrow at the separation from Krishna, due to his loving memories, and being completely disheartened, started singing his praises. They were singing in various Ragas in trying to tune with Sorath, perfect Malhar, Bilawal, and Sarang ragas. They were meditating in their minds over Krishna's rememberance, but that thought also brought them great pain and suffering. On perceiving Krishna's form, in their mind alone, they were withering in moroseness just as the lotus flower gets withered at the sight of moon even. (862)

(They felt) that Krishna had joined and developed friendship for outsiders (town residents) and the Lord-Yadav had totally forgotten us. He had deserted us here, and had shifted his love from us. He had not even sent us any message, as he had got enticed in the company of womenfolk of the town (city). One maid had fallen down on the ground on uttering these words while another milkmaid became unconscious by heaving sighs of grief. (863)

Having felt depressed with grief at heart, the milkmaids were talking like this, as they were talking like this, and were feeling greatly aggrieved as Sri Krishna had roped them in the noose of his love. Being enraged they were saying that Krishna did not bother about the jeering of other people even; so he had deserted us in Brij only, and the Brij resident had decided to stay with outsiders, being engrossed in their love. (864)

All the milkmaids were crying and wailing together and being humble, they were saying like this. Having left Brij, he had gone to Mathura and having forgotten our love he had become completely unaware of our deep love for him (loveless). One milkmaid having said these words, fell down on the ground while another Brij woman managed to stabilise herself and was saying, "O friend! Listen to me! Infact, Sri Krishna had forsaken all the womenfolk of Brij. (865)

"O friend! Krishna seemed to be standing in front of us, but why was he not to be seen by us? (with the eyes). With whom in the forest, we used to enjoy sensuous love in the forest, why had he developed such a dual-mindedness towards us now? He has completely lost his love towards Brij-residents, and had not even sent a message for us. Why had he become so stubborn and careless towards us? O my mother! We are still looking for him, but he is nowhere to be seen!" (866)

Barahmah (Description of twelve months)

Swaiyya'

O friend! During the month of Phalgun (February/March 15th) we used to enjoy games of love with Krishna by throwing coloured water (powder gulal) on each other. That time all the milkmaids were carrying coloured-water guns in hands and used to sing songs. In the bye-lanes of beautiful Kunj we had forgotten all our sorrows and sufferings. We had even given up our attachment for our homes, and only the love of Shiam controlling our hearts. (867)

The (beautiful) milkmaids like a flower was having the flowers of the same colour as the shade of her clothes (dress). One of the maids sings about the embellishments of Shiam (Krishna) and then singing like a koel (black cuckoo) feels greatly elated at heart. O friend! The name of Basant season (spring season) has been given (changed) to Shiam, as such all have dressed themselves with beautiful clothes. Even Brahma, seeing this beauty had got alarmed, and everyone was feeling delighted with (happiness) joy at heart, by seeing all this. (868)

O dear friend! At one stage the Kasu (yellow) flowers were blooming all around with a pleasant breeze. On one side, the black bee (wasp) was making a musical sound while on the other side, the flute was being played by Krishna. On hearing the sound of the flute, the gods in heavens were feeling delighted; the beauty of that scene is beyond description. That time, this season was very pleasant and lovable, but now without Krishna's presence (Shiam), it is appearing gloomy and painful. (869)

O friend! During the month of Jeth (May/June) we used to play on the banks of river with lot of amusement and merry-making at heart. With the covering of the body with sandal wood paste and with rose water the ground (Earth) was sprinkled, the clothes were all covered with the scent or aroma of good fragrance, and the beauty is beyond words. This season used to be very pleasant and enjoyable, but now without Shiam (Krishna), the same period is painful, being sorrowful. (870)

When the wind used to blow strongly, with whirl winds raising dust high up, the month where sunshine used to be unpleasant, while a cool place was considered more comfortable and enjoyable. Then we used to playwith siam (Krishna) by spreading cool mats (with cold water sprinkled around). Then this season was pleasant and comfortable, but now it is all painful and sorrowful. (871)

O friend! when the clouds would appear in dark patches, and then rain drops would appear beautiful, at that time the chatriks (cuckoos), frogs and clouds would produce loud noises and the peacocks used to create their own beautiful sounds, that time we used to play with Krishna with increased love and affection (for him). That time the season appeared very charming, but now the whole atmosphere is charged with painful memories only. (872)

O dear friend! During the month of Bhadon (August/September) sometimes it would rain while at othe times it would be clear sunshine and the shade of trees would appear soothing. O friend! We used to play with Shiam (Krishna) moving in his company, and had made our clothes out of colourful flowers; while playing the games of love with Krishna, enjoying sensuous pleasure, we used to enjoy his company which is beyond all description. In the company of Krishna this season was very pleasing and enjoyable, but without Shiam the same period appears painful. (873)

During the month of Asu (September/October), we used to play with Krishna with increased merriment and joy at heart, Then Krishna used to sing and play various tunes in Ragas beautifully and we used to join him in singing. The beauty of that scene cannot be described. In the company of Krishna, this season was very pleasant, but in his separation the same season is full of pain and sorrow. (874)

O dear friend! During the month of Kartik (October/November) we used to enjoy sensuous pleasure in the love of Krishna, while playing games of love. The white dresses of the milkmaids were also white-coloured, and the (garlands of) necklaces of pearls were also looking beautiful. Then the season appeared very enjoyable, but now it had become very painful. (875)

During the month of maghar (November/December) all the milkmaids used to play with Shiam, and felt very happy and satisfied at heart. When we felt cold, we used to get the warmth by keeping the effects of cold weather away from us. (We used to play) at a place where Jasmine flowers were blooming and Jamuna's waters used to flow near the bathing point. That time, this weather was very soothing, but now it had become painful and sorrowful. (876)

O dear friend! During the winter months (month of Poh) we used to play with Krishna with great affection and love, thus enjoying great fun and merriment, and getting rid of all our afflictions or worries. All the womenfolk of Brij town were engrossed in Krishna's love having no hesitation or gender complex and doubt at heart. In the company of Krishna, this weather was very pleasant and enjoyable, but without Shiam the same season had become gloomy. (877)

During the month of Magh (January/February) we used to play various games of love in the company of Krishna and he used to play various games of love, and he used to enjoy and spread the message of love. Then Kahna used to play on his flute but that beautiful period is beyond any description now. That time beautiful flowers were blossoming all around, perceiving which even Indra was feeling delighted. That time, this season was most enjoyable, but now, without the presence of Shiam (Krishna) it had become painful and gloomy. (878)

The poet siam has stated those milkmaids were really fortunate, and now all those women were only recalling those moments of enjoyment alongwith Krishna. They had lost all their sense of proportion and they were only absorbed in talking about those memorable times. One of the milkmaids had fallen unconscious on the ground, while another was busy in recounting his praises. Or else, all the milkmaids would start wailing and crying together while remembering those moments of playful enjoyment alongwith Krishna. (879)

Swaiyya'

On one side the milkmaids were suffering in separation whereas on the other side Krishna's (plight) episode is being recounted. The poet siam has stated that the whole ground (earth) was covered with cowdung and all the brahmins (leading teachers) were called and according to the poet siam, Krishna was made to sit on this purified place for Gayatri Mantar (by the brahmin's) who was suppossed to look after the whole world (whose name was tobe known all over the Universe). (880)

They had put the sacred thread (Janeou) around siam's neck and then the Mantar (the magical cantos) was read into his ears (was made to hear). On hearing this mantar, Krishna bowed to the Muni Garg and gave him many gifts in alms. He gave away many horses, great elephants' and camels to the prohit (Garg) which were decorated with grand ornaments. Krishna after giving many pearls, rubis and emeralds, was greatly pleased and delighted and bowed in obeisance to the Muni (Garg). (881)

After giving the teachings of Mantra, the pundit was pleased having received lot of money and other gifts. He felt greatly relieved at heart and leaving that place he came back to his house. All the friends were delighted to hear this story of gifts, and the poverty conditions at home were cast away. (882)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar of Bachittar Natak Granth from Dasam Sakand Puran, dealing with the episode of the ceremony of Sacred Thread and teaching Gayatri Mantra to Sri Krishna is completed. All is well so far.

Now the episode of bestowing the Kingdom to Ugrasain begins

Swaiyya'

After taking the Gayatri Mantra from the pandit, then Krishna got freedom from captivity for the father of (Kans) his enemy. Being freed from captivity, Ugrasain realized Krishna's true form (of incarnation) and bowed to him, by placing his head at his feet. Then Ugrasain told him, "O Krishna! Pray take this Kingdom, but Sri Krishna made him king and made him occupy the seat of kingship. Everywhere there was a wave of happiness, and Sri Krishna's praises were being sung all around, while the saints got relieved from their sufferings. (883)

When Krishna had given back the Kingdom to the father of his enemy, (Ugrasain), it was just like one generous person giving away some coins to a person and feels ashamed of himself for this small offer (insignificant offer) and after handing over the Kingdom, he did not take anything for himself. By completely wiping out the existence of enemies and brought relief to the holy persons. The poet siam has stated that after this episode Sri Krishna and Balram thought in their mind of getting some training in the use of weapons. (884)

Now the episode of getting training in archery from Sandipan by going there, begins

Swaiyya'

Taking permission from the father, both the brothers went to learn the art of using arrows and bows, and were great warriors with the beauty of moon before the Guru (teacher) Sandipan. Krishna, who had getting engraged killed the demon Mur, and later had won over Bal Raja with deceit, was now trying to learn the art of archery. (885)

The poet siam has stated that within sixty-four days, they had learnt all the training in the art of archery. On the sixty-fifth day Krishna went upto the Guru requesting him to accept his "offering to the Guru." Then the Guru consulted his wife about the type of offering he should take. Then she suggested that he should ask for the return of their sons, who had been lost in the ocean. On hearing his demnad, with both-ears, Krishna agreed and gave away his demand. (886)

Then both the (bothers) great warriors, (Krishna and Balram) came to the ocean, riding their chariot, on the confluence of the rivers with the ocean. On seeing Krishna's face, (the ocean recognized Krishna) and bowing his head, said, "There is a powerful demon (within) and I even do not know if he had kidnapped those children. On hearing this, both the brothers plunged into the waters (ocean) and joining together, both blew their conch shells in great rage. (887)

As soon as they had jumped into the ocean, they had seen a dreadful demon and on seeing him, they were filled with anger and wrathfulness and holding their weapons fought against that demon. The battle lasted for twenty days and the poet siam has described the beauty of this scene (battle) like this, just as a lion kills a deer, similarly Krishna had destroyed the demon with great fury. (888)

Here the episode of the death of the demon is completed

Swaiyya'

After killing the demon, Sri Krishna took out the conch shell from his chest, which used to give the tunes of the Vedas and he removed it from the body of the killed enemy. Then feeling greatly elated Sri Krishna went to the place (town) of the son of the Sun (Yamraj). On seeing Sri Krishna, the (Yamraj) god of death bowed to him, and got relieved of his mind's suffering. (889)

In the place of Sun's son (Yamraj) Sri Krishna shouted loudly saying (by his mouth) "Are the sons of my friend kept here?" Then Krishna told the god of death, in this manner, but Yamraj replied like this, "From the land of Yamlok (god of death), nobody could go back even at the behest of the gods (with their permission)." Then Krishna said, "Please give back the sons of the learned brahmin, and do not hesitate or refuse it.'" (890)

Then obeying the orders of Sri Krishna, the god of death (Yamraj) brought back the sons of the brahmin and placed them at the feet of Krishna. Sri Krishna, alongwith those boys (sons) started back, feeling greatly satisfied and relieved at heart. Bringing them along, Krishna bowed at the feet of the Guru, feeling greatly hesitant. The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna then took leave of the Guru and came back to his town. (891)

Then feeling greatly delighted, Sri Krishna met the members of his family. Thus Sandipan (Guru) was overjoyed and all his worries were cast away. (Basically the whole family got relieved, and their worries were over). (892)

Here the chapter on getting training in weapons and bringing back Sandipan's sons, and then coming back home is completed. Now the episode of sending Udho to Brij town begins.

Swaiyya'

One day, at the time of going to sleep, Sri Krishna felt worried about the welfare of the residents of Brij town, which needed immediate attention. So as the day dawned, he sent for Udhav and asked him to proceed to Gokal, and told him to give solace to the milkmaids, and also give some soothing touch (relief) to his foster mother. There is nothing more fruitful than to make both attachment and separation fight against each other (to wipe out attachment or love with the help of separation). (893)

So at the day dawn, Udhav was sent for and despatched to Brij town. So he went to the house of Nand and started talking about grief and pleasant memories. In reply Nand said to Udhav, "Has Sri Krishna thought of me (remembered me) any time?" Having thus remembered about Shiam, Nand fell down unconscious on the gound. (894)

When Nand had fallen down unconscious on the ground, then that Udhav said, "Krishna had come." Hearing this Nand again rallied to stand up and forgot all about his grief and worries of mind. But when he did not see Krishna, he started saying, "I knew that Udhav was being deceptive, as having left Brij completely, Sri Krishna had settled at Mathura and had not returned to Brij at all. (895)

Sri Krishan had deserted Brij town, and had thus caused great grief and suffering to the populace. O Udhav, "Listen to me! Without Krishna, our town has become completely hollow (empty) and charmless. The Lord, having bestowed us with a child, had through no sin of ours (fault), made us bereft of him." Having said this he bowed his head (in distress) and started crying, feeling greatly distressed and depressed. (896)

Having said this, Nand again fell down on the ground (unconscious) and on gaining consciousness, he told Udhav like this "Why has Krishna gone to Mathura having left Brij town? Please tell me the reason behind this right now. O Udhav, "I bow to you in humility and ask you to explain the detailed cause of his going away. Has Krishna gone away considering me a sinner, and thus enraged he had left for Mathura and had not even bothered about knowing about my welfare at all. (897)

Thus Nand had replied to Udhav after hearing his talk. He was son of Basudrv Infact, the God Almightlyy had not taken him away from us all and started wailing and crying. Seeing Nand crying, even Udhav started crying. (898)

With a strong mind, Udhav told Nand that he need not have any worry. You listen to me about what Sri Krishna had told himself to be conveyed, as it gives peace of mind in listening to him, and whose charming appearance gives another lease of life (to human beings). He only had said not to worry, and this will not cause any harm to you. (899)

Having heard such words from Udhav, he (Nand) again asked him more details. He felt little relieved at heart and all his grief and sorrow disappeared. He forgot about every thing else and was only listening from him about Krishna's story. So Nand was engrossed in the thoughts about Krishna so keenly just as a Yogi (ascetic) gets absorbed in meditation. (900)

After saying all this (having given the mesage) Udhav then went to Brij town and there he found about the condition (welfare) of the milkmaids. It appeared as if a pall of gloom had fallen there, and the trees had also withered. The milkmaids were absorbed in silence and sitting at home in grief, but with his (Udhav's) coming, a new hope had been arisen causing dual-mindedness. The reason being, that on hearing Krishna's name, they had been delighted but without seeing him (without his coming back) again they felt gloomy with separation. (901)

Then Udhav said,

Swaiyya'

Udhav told the milkmaids to listen to the message of Krishna at least. Whatever path had been suggested by Krishna, should be followed by them and they should function as suggested "that you should become jogans (ascetics) and tear away your clothes."O friends! Let us (you should) only meditate on him, as it would not harm us a bit even." (902)

The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids said to Udhav like this. "On hearing whose name, we are feeling the pangs of separation and the happiness gets lessened and on hearing whose name, the heart feels aggrieved. O Krishna! You have deserted us, but we are completely in love with you at heart. You (Udhav) go and tell him this, who had sent this message. O Krishna! You have completely lost your love for us." (903)

The milkmaids said,

Swaiyya

After listening to the talk of Udhav of this type, the milkmaids told Udhav like this. "Since the day, Krishna had discarded us, he had never bothered to find out about our welfare. As such, you have burnt our heart in the pangs of your love (O Krishna)." After replying like this, the milkmaids said, which has been described by the poet (its beauty). "O Udhav! Tell Krishna like this, O Krishna! You have completely forgotten about our love. (904)

When all the women were engrossed in Krishna's love, they told Udhav like this. Whatever way he had told Udhav, the milkmaids also replied to Udhav like this with the request. The milkmaids, whose bodies were beautiful like gold and who were young in age as well, they said, "O Udhav! Krishna had left us in the lurch, and had not bothered about our welfare except sending you now." (905)

One milkmaids, with great affliction, said while another milkmaid stated this with great rage, who had lost all love for Krishna. "O Udhav! To see whom, our heart is in great anguish, that Krishna had gone away to the town having deserted us, and is now enjoying their love (of the residents). If Krishna had deserted the milkmaids, then the Brij women had also forgotten about him." (906)

Some milkmaids said, "That Krishna (siam) had deserted us, and we will also act accordingly. We will dress up like Jognas (ascetic women) and cover ourselves as such, while some others said, that they will continue singing his praises. Some others said that they would end their lives by consuming poison; while some others said that they would become Jognas (ascetic) and go there, while some otheres said that they would face death by meditating upon him." (907)

Then Udhav told the milkmaids,
Swaiyya'

On seeing the plight of milkmaids, Udhav said in great emotion, "I know that but I am all sacrifice to you (for your love) as you have (great) intense love for Sri Krishna. But Sri Krishna had sent me with this message for you, according to which you should assume the form of an ascetic (female) or Jogans, then forgetting all household chores you should meditate only on Krishna (all the friends). Swaiyya'

"Once in the bye-lanes of Kunj, Krishna had given me a pair of ear-rings, which were made of gold with very costly pearls studded therein, whose beauty even Brahma could not describe. These ear-rings were even studded with diamonds and were shining like the lightning, thus producing a charm all around on the ground. O Udhav! That time Krishna had given me those beautiful ear-rings and now he had sent this dress of an ascetic (jogan) for me." (909)

"Another milkmaid said that we will become female hermits (jogans) while another maid remarked, that they would do according to Krishna's ordains. We will smear the whole body with ash, carry a purse of ashes in the hands, alongwith a beggar's bowl. Another milkmaid remarked that they would go to meet him, whereas another maid said that she would end up her life by consuming something (poison). Another maid said that she would burn herself in the fire of the pangs of his separation." (910)

Radha told Udhav -
Swaiyya'

Radha, who was completely immersed in the love of Krishna said like this, "Sri Krishna had deserted Brij and gone to Mathura, so what will be our plight. I am feeling in my heart that by seeing the womenfolk of the town, Krishna was engrossed in their love straightaway. Even the bench-back woman had enamoured Krishna with her charm. He had neither felt any pangs of separation nor he had felt any pangs of our love and our suffering in his separation." (911)

"My bed had been bedecked with the beautiful flowers, while the moonlit night was looking praiseworthy. The river Jamnuna with white waters is flowing closely and my dress is also white and white coloured pearls were beautifying my neck. But without Kahna, the god of love (Kamdev) is throwing the arrows of lustful love with full force. But the henchback woman had enticed him so much that neither he had felt any anguish (in separation) nor he had felt the pangs of separation of our love any more. (912)

Once it was a beautiful dark night, and the dark complexioned Krishna was also looking graceful, while down below the (dark) black waters of Jamuna were flowing, and there was no other support except siam at that place. The god of love was troubling siam; and this is what Radha had said. "Siam had been enamoured by the hench back woman, who had him under her control. So neither he felt any heart burns nor he felt any anguish for the love for us." (913)

All the trees in Brij town were blooming and the flowerladen creepers were clinging to these trees. In the ponds, lotus flowers were blossoming beautifully, and then they all looked praiseworthy. On the eve of the month of Chet (March) beautiful parrots and black cuckoos (nightingales) were singing, but without the presence of the beloved (spouse) the spring season is not worth it. He was enjoying in the company of the maid-servant. He had neither felt any pangs of separation nor he had any inkling of love for us." (914)

The aroma of beautiful flowers has risen to the skies, while those on the Earth were also enjoying this beauty. A cool and slow breeze with the aroma of flowers was blowing which has mingled with the dust of flowers within itself without any hesitation. During the month of Vaisakh (April) the aroma of flowers has spread all around, but it is causing painful anguish to the Brij residents, as the (lady) gardener had removed all the fragrance of love. But neither his (Krishna's) heart had felt the pangs of separation nor he has felt the loss of love and our sufferings. (915)

Both the water and air are having the burning heat of fire while the sky and Earth both are feeling the warmth of heat. Not a single passenger was seen walking on the path while the birds were looking upto the trees for cooling this heat wave. The month of Jeth (May) was becoming very unpleasant and hot, while one feels the heat of the season as repelling. During such a period the heart beats with vigorous bursts, feeling his separation, but he (Krishna) had neither felt any anguish nor the painful suffering in the absence or our love. (916)

A wind with scathing heat was blowing, while the mind being upset (unruly) was scattered in all the ten directions. All the men and women were climbing around their homes, while the birds were looking for, water and shade. In the month of Asar (June), in the heat of the new season (the onset of monsoon) the frogs and peacocks have created a continuous noise of their own. But during this season separated persons (from their beloved ones) were suffering the most, whereas Krishna had neither felt any anguish nor any suffering due to our love and separation. (917)

All the tanks were filled with water upto the brim, while the rivers had mingled with the oceans. The dark clouds were replete with lightning sounds, while the papiha (toad) was producing his usual notes. "In the month of Sa'van (July) the monsoon clouds were busy producing showers of rain. But O mother! The beloved spouse was not with me, as he had developed love for the damsels of the town. So neither he had felt any pangs of separation nor he had suffered the pangs of love." (918)

"The month of Bhadon (August) had begun, while the beloved was not with us while the dark clouds had clustered all around (in the ten directions) making gurgling sounds. The darkness produced by the clouds renders it rather difficult to distinguish between day and night, while the lightning flashes from these clouds produce the beauty of sunshine. The rain is falling in heavy showers from the sky, while the whole ground is covered with water. On such an occasion, the beloved (Lord) had deserted us as he had neither felt any pangs of separation nor he had felt any pain of our love for him. (919)

Now the month of Asu (September) had started in full force and I am crying and wailing but the beloved (Krishna) had not come to meet me. White clouds have covered the sky while at night the lightning flashes were seen, which have caused the tanks and mountain cliffs shine forth brilliantly. Clouds, bereft of rain (water), were moving around in the sky, which had made my heart to shudder with fear. But I had been separated from my beloved for whom I had developed so much love. But he had neither felt any pangs of separation nor any pain of love for us. (920)

In the month of Kartik (October) the lamp is lit with the help of wick, similarly the sky is illumined and people are busy playing games of gambling wherein all the young men and women are engrossed in those games. The houses covered with a layer of limestone have been decorated with various paintings, while the courtyards are well presented, which makes one feel enticed. But the beloved has not turned up so far, as he has got engrossed in the love of the town. Neither he has felt any pangs of separation nor he had felt any attraction for our love. (921)

All the lakes were spreading the aroma of lotus-flowers, while the rivers had lesser amount of water flowing therein. O Mother! By hearing the beautiful sound of swans chirupping without the presence of the beloved was causing great affliction to us. There was no respite from the suffering during day or night, as the month of Maghar (November) had started, but Kahna had not turned up. We cannot afford to break off our link with Krishna, whereas he had neither felt any pangs of separation nor any affection for our love for him. (922)

All the beings from the skies or lands were happily enjoying in their homes, while due to cold weather there is much despondency in the atmosphere. We were feeling restless on the banks of rivers or even with silken clothes; even the scented oils and beetle nuts were causing us painful memories. In the month of Poh (December) there was nothing pleasant or soothing. The body is getting dried up just as the budding sapplings were withering. (The reason being) that Krishna was enammoured by the love of the town women folk. So neither he had felt any pangs of separation nor any affection of love. (923)

In the month of Magh (January) the beloved was not at home, as such the warmth of the sun was also causing scolding heat. The days were passing without any count, while the nights were never ending (being too long) the sounds of nightingale, pigeons and black wasps was appearing frieghtening to hear. Krishna had developed love for the women of the town so neither he had felt any pangs of our separation nor any affection for our love. (924)

During the month of phalgun (February) the love of holi had increased within the hearts of wedded women and were enjoying their wedded lives. They were wearing saffron coloured clothes and were using rose water scents and throwing dry colours in revelery. The poet has described the beauty of this scene like this, as if the heat of sensual love lying latent during the twelve months has been awakened and then made praiseworthy. "But I am totally disappointed having given up the hope of Krishna's return. He had neither felt any pangs of separation nor had any love lost for us in his heart. (925)

Here the chapter on Baramah of the separation (of milkmaids) in Krishnavtar of Bachittar Natak is completed

O friend! We had spent all the time with this Krishna playing games in the bye-lanes of Kunj. He used to sing there while we used to sing songs of joy together. But now he had gone to Mathura leaving Brij town and he was fed up with the milkmaids now. They told Udhav like this in a loud voice, "Alas! Siam had not come to our homes." (926)

Then the milkmaids told Udhav.

Swaiyya'

"O Udhav! Listen! At one stage Krishna used to roam around alongwith us in the bye-lanes of Kunj. He used to talk to us nicely having developed great love for us. Our hearts had been won over by him due to his love, and the women folk of Brij used to feel greatly thrilled. Now he had deserted us and gone to Mathura. So what is the use of this life having been separated from him? (927)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

The poet siam has stated that whatever things Udhav has told the milkmaids about Krishna, they were not giving any logical answer but they were talking about love only. "O friend! By perceiving whose beautiful face, we used to have our food and would not drink water even without whose presence" (They were saying). Whatever reasonable and logical words Udhav explained to the milkmaids keeping their interest in mind, they were not prepared to listen to accept any such thing. (928)

The milkmaids told Udhav -

Swaiyya'

All the milkmaids together told Udhav. "O Udhav! Listen! Go and tell Sri Krishna like this. Whatever information Krishna had sent through Udhav we have listened to all that talk." The poet siam has stated that it behoves him (Udhav) to convey the amount of love they had for Krishna. He had deserted all the milkmaids and gone to Mathura, but he must keep a watch on our welfare and our interest. (929)

liyae ho. (932)

When the milkmaids told Udhav like this he was filled with great affection and regard for the milkmaids. Infact he had tost all his sense of proportion and had become complietely lost in their favour having been divested of all his knowledge or reasoning. He had become one with the milkmaids in their predicament and was convinced of their extreme love (for Krishna). It seemed as if he had shaken up all the cover (clothing) of reasoning (logic) and was swayed into the river of love. (930)

When such words were exchanged with the milkmaids he was fully convinced of their love (for Krishna). Thus Uadhav had given up all his knowledge or reasoning and was filled only with the cult of love in his heart. He was himself filled with the instinct of love, and told like this, that Krishna had left Brij in complete desolation, making it lifeless. "O friends! He had deserted all womenfolk like you and gone to Mathura, as such Krishna had done an unreputable action (which was bad in taste). (931)

So Udhav told the milkmaids -

Swaiyya'

"O dear friends! On reaching Mathura. I would request Krishna to send his emissary to take you all to Mathura. Whatever predicament of suffering you are having, would be explained to Krishna in detail. I would explain to Krishna about your request, as it suited him, for action." The poet siam has stated that he would bow and request Krishna, and make him agree to visit Brij again. (932)

When Udhav said things like this, all of them felt happy at Udhav and their suffering was mitigated and they felt extremely happy at heart. The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids requested Udhav and told him like this. When you go to meet Krishna, please convey to him that "No one deserts his beloved ones, after having developed love for them." (933)

"(O Krishna!) While playing in the bye-lanes of Kunj town, you had won over the hearts of the milkmaids. For the sake of love of these milkmaids, you had borne the jeals of people and for their love you had fought against the enemies." The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids thus requested Udhav and told him, "Having deserted us in Kunj, Krishna had gone to Mathura, which was a very bad action (function) on his part." (934)

"(O Krishna!)" You had deserted those living in Brij and had got engrossed in the love of those living in the city. The extent of love you had for us, you had forgotten that, being enamoured by the love of the city residents (women)." "O Udhav! Please listen carefully as he had sent us the clothes of ascetic women (jogans) through you only. O Udhav! Go and tell him "O Krishna! You had forgotten all our love and affection." (935)

"O Udhav! When you will go to Mathura leaving this Brij town, then bow to Krishna with respect and love on our behalf and them with great respect on our behalf you tell Krishna like this. "One should develop love with someone only if one could continue to support it, otherwise one should not get engrossed in love with others." (936)

"O Udhav! Listen to my words. Whenever I meditate on Krishna, my heart is filled with the pangs of separation. Thus at the time of this thought in mind, I am neither alive nor feel without life. Infact, my body has no sense of existence (consciousness) and I fall down on the ground in an unconscious state. So you go and tell Krishna about my state of mind, so how could I have patience of mind?" (937)

The poet siam has stated that the milkmaids who used to feel very proud of themselves, were telling their story in very humble ways. Those maids, whose beauty was comparable to the spouse of the god of love, they were talking madly in love, which has been described by the poet in these words. "O Udhav! All the milkmaids were like the fish, who were living (alive) in the waters of Krishna's name only." (938)

Radha had spoken to Udhav like this, being distressed extremely with pain (of separation). Even all the delicious foods, ornaments, and the house does not have any attraction for me, without the presence of Krishna. Her eyes were completely overtaken (overpowered) by the separation of Krishna, and its beauty has been explained (praised) by the poet like this. The lotus like eyes of the damsel Radha were wet with tears as if she was crying in pain. (939)

Radha was fully immersed in Krishna's love and was thinking in her mind about him only. She started crying and wailing in great distress, which made her tears wash down the collyrium of the eyes. The beauty of the scene had impressed the poet siam so much that he has described it as such. It appeared as if the moon's ignomy had appeared through the eyes being washed away. (940)

Having gathered some patience, then Radha told Udhav in such touching words. "Since Krishna had lost all love for the milkmaids of Kunj, it seened he had found some shortcomings in us. When he had seated himself in the chariot, he did not even look at them (milkmaids). It seemed that our luck had forsaken us so he had deserted Brij and gone to Mathura." (941)

"O Udhav! When you go to Mathura, then please tell Krishna and make this request on our behalf. Please hold his feet for ten hours (gharian) and then mention my name. Now listen to my words and pass on this message. I know that now you have lost all love for us, but at least once you may recall our great love for you and be satisfied with its sincerity." (942)

Radha had talked to Udhav like this. Since the time she was filled with Krishna's love, she had forgotten about all other things (and given up other details). Please tell him the same thing just as he had been obstinate towards me in the forest. That time I had shown my anger towards him, so now he had shown his wrath towards me. (943)

"In the forest, you had played with me the games of love, O Krishna! Try to remember those moments. Just try to remember those moments (events) of love which you (passed) did towards me. Just think of those times. Why had you discarded Brij and gone to Mathura now? I fully well know that there was no fault of yours, it was due to my bad luck only." (944)

Having heard these words, Udhav replied "That Krishna had great love for you. (O Rahda!) I know fully that he would come back again. My mind also feels that this very thought has crossed your mind (that he would come back). Why would he come back leaving Mathura, when he did not relent after the milkmaids had told him not to go? (Then Radha said), "I know that my luck was not favouring me, since I know, Krishna would never return to his house." (945)

Having said these words Radha started crying and felt greatly distressed at heart. Feeling dizzy (badly) she fell down on the ground and forgot all about the comforts and bliss, she had enjoyed earlier. She was only meditating on Krishna, having lost her consciousness. Then she said to Udhav in a loud voice, "Alas! Krishna had not come to my place (home) so far!" (946)

"O Udhav! Listen to me! (Krishna), with whom we had played many games (of love) in the bye-lanes of Kunj, when he had started singing songs of joy, and we also joined him in singing songs of joy. The same Krishna had gone to Mathura, having deserted Brij, thus causing great mental (torture) distress to the milkmaids. Saying these words, she again told Udhav in a loud, crying voice, "Alas! Krishna had not turned up so far at my place!" (947)

"Sri Krishna had deserted Brij and gone to Mathura, having completely forgotten us from his mind. The poet siam has stated that he had been enamoured by the love (ensnared by) of the town women and had endeared himself in their love. "O Udhav! Listen to our painful predicament, for which all the women folk of Brij were desperate in his separation. Just as a snake shakes off his skin, similarly Krishna had discarded the Brij women. (948)

The poet siam has stated that Radha then addressed Udhav like this, whose face was shinnig like the moon, and who was most beautiful in all the three worlds. Sri Krishna had deserted Brij town as such she was feeling restless like a mad person. Since the day Sri Krishna had left for Mathura, nobody else except you had bothered to find out about our welfare. (949)

Since the day of leaving Brij town, (by Krishna) no one else except you had been sent to us by him. The poet siam has stated that all the love, which Krishna had for the milkmaids, had been completely lost (forgotten). He himself was enjoying the company of city damsels and having caused pain and suffering to the milkmaids, he was trying to placate the city women. "O Udhav! Go to Krishna and tell him. "O Krishna! What had cropped up in your mind?" (950)

"Since the day you have left Brij town and gone to Mathura, you have not bothered to visit Brij at all". The poet siam has stated that you have got endeared to city dwellers and are enjoying bliss in their company. "O Udhav! Krishna had made these milkmaids to suffer and after that they have not gained any happiness or joyful moments. Infact, he was not a product of Brij town (he was not born here) as such he had become a stranger in no time. (951)

"(O Krishna!) You had deserted them and after that you never bothered to find out about their welfare. If you had some love or affection for them, then you would not have behaved in such a manner. You have got enamoured by the love of the city womenfolk, having forgotten about their love (for you). You should not feel proud about it and come back to Brij town. (You should not ignore us) (We agree), you have won the game and we have lost the game of love. O Caretaker of the cows! Pray leave Mathura and come back again to Brij town." (952)

The poet siam has stated that all the milkmaids, remembering the company of Krishna, were feeling distressed with agony; one milkmaid had fallen down unconscious on the ground while another was singing songs in his separation, full of agony. Someone was shouting (O Krishna!) for Krishna while another milkmaid, hearing these words with her ears runs away to another direction. When she does not see Krishna around, she says that now Krishna would never come in their grasp (midst). (953)

Without hearing the news about Sri Krishna's return, the milkmaids were greatly distressed with madness. Radha also felt confounded in her mind, and had withered in her heart. Whatever bad state of mind she was suffering from, she had mentioned the same to Udhav. Since Krishna had not turned up, so she was feeling greatly pained, which could not be expressed. (954)

Udhav then replied as he was also feeling very sad at heart. The poet siam has stated that Udhav was saying the same thing, which was appealing to the milkmaids. Sri Krishna would soon meet them in a few days, and they should have no doubt about it in their mind. "You should meditate on him like an ascetic women, and Sri Krishna would bestow on you whatever you desire." (955)

After giving such a message of great enlightenment, Udhav came to meet Nand (Jasodha's spouse). As he came there Jasodha and Nand both bowed their heads to him. Then Udhav told them, that they should always repeat the name of siam as Sri Krishna had sent him for giving this message to them. After saying this, he rode his chariot and started moving his chariot towards Mathura. (956)

Then Udhav said to Kahna -
Swaiyya'

Udhav then reached Mathura and paid his obeisance to Krishna, and Balram, and said, "Whatever message you had given me to be delivered to them, I have given the same message to them all. After giving a discourse of knowledge to Nand and the milkmaids, I have returned here. Having perceived your shining face like the sun, all the darkness of my dismay and distress had vanished." (957)

"After touching your lotus-feet when I had gone. I went straight to meet Nand. After giving your message of enlightenment to him, I had gone to meet the milkmaids. They had expressed their agony in your separation to me, and then I gave them this reply after listening to their tale of suffering. O damsels! Always meditate on the name of siam, repeating his name siam all the time. On hearing the name of siam, their love had grown byeond imagination." (958)

Then Udhav gave their message -

Swaiyya'

"The milkmaids had told me to bow to Sri Krishna on their behalf. Then they had asked me to convey to you that leaving the company of city womenfolk, you should come and give some solace and joy to the women of Brij town. Then Jashoda had requested me to convey to her son Krishna, this message. O Udhav! Tell him to come again and take part in relishing butter." (959)

"Another request she had made, which you must listen carefully, leaving aside all other matter. Jasodha had told another thing that Sri Krishna was very dear to them. So there was no need for any (dual-mindedness) problem. We would only say that he should think of our love for him. So O dear son! Relinquish your love for Mathura and come back to Brij" (to be conveyed to you)." (960)

The poet siam has stated, the mother had sent a request for your consideration, who was the queen of Brij town. Her love for you was intense and I have realised it in my heart. That is why she had sent a message for you, to leave Mathura and come back to Brij. That is how she had addressed to you. When you were in Childhood, you used to listen to me, but now you had grown up, so you do not agree to even one request." (961)

The milkmaids have also told me similary to convey to you to come back and give some solace to all the milkmaids. Have you forgotten when you used to beseech us with folded hands? (O Krishna!)". (962)

The poet siam has stated "That you had left Brij and gone to Mathura, so now you must come back to Brij town. The milkmaids had conveyed a message that appreciating their love, you should not delay there even for a moment. So please convey this on our behalf, by bowing to him, to come back to Brij. Go and tell Krishna to go to Brij, so that we could enjoy some bliss and he (Krishna) could also have peace of mind." (963)

"So they had stated "that you had left Brij and gone to Mathura, so now you must come back to Brij town, thus giving peace of mind to the Brij tesidents (women). Also convey to him to come to Brij, as it would not result in any loss to him. Also convey to him, O benevolent Lord! Pray show your face to us, which results in rejuvinating life in us. Also convey to him that he should come back to the byelanes of Kunj and enjoy the bliss of kissing our lips and faces." (964)

Go and tell Krishna that without his presence all the milkmaids were feeling helpless." (965)

"O Krishna! Radha, who was dearest to you, had conveyed this message for you. Since the day you have gone (left) from Brij, town, we have lost all our sense of proportion. So now you should immediately leave Mathura and come back to us, as we are feeling helpless without your presence. O Krishna! I had been rather rude to you once, now you should forget about any ill will and come back as I am totally helpless and dejected." (966)

"(O Krishna!) why have you deserted us, whereas we had not annoyed you on any score? O Krishna! Listen to us. She had stated this thing by bowing at your feet, that you had got enamoured by the love of city women, and you had completely forgotten all the womenfolk of Brij. The poet siam has stated that she had made another request to you which you should listen with great attention. Just try to remember the moments when we used to play with you (the games of love). I used to sing songs alongwith you, which were in such a tune, which would not break the song's rhythm. She had stated that atleast sometime (once) you should find out about her welfare, and bestow solace and peace of mind to the Brij womenfolk." (968)

"O Krishna! Radha had stated one more thing, which you may listen right now. She had requested you to come to Brij bye-lanes (again) now itself, leaving Mathura. Then she had added that you should once again play with us the same old games (of love) as you used to play earlier. Then further she had said that she had a great desire to perceive you again, so please come to meet us and give solace to us at our place." (969)

"O Sri Krishna! Without seeing you presence around, my mind is restless and would not feel satisfied in anyother way. Then the doll like Radha, having gone thin and lean in your separation added, O Sri Krishna! Pray listen to Radha's prayers and requests! She had stated that she would not be satisfied merely by words (talks), as I feel satiated only by perceiving Sri Krishna in person. The milkmaids, like the black partridge, would get satisfied only by seeing the moon-like face of Krishna, so pray come and give them some solace." (970)

"O Killer of Kansa! O Lord-Creator! O Destroyer of Bakasur! Please listen to whatever I am saying. O Master of Brij! Listen! Pray end the sufferings of all these milkmaids by showing your face. Without seeing the appearance of Ghan Shyam (Krishna) nothing else appeals to them. So, "O Krishna! Pray come back to Brij town, leaving Mathura, thus alleviating the sufferings of all these milkmaids. (974)

Now describe the message of Bijchhata and Mainprabha :

Swaiyya'

"O Sri Krishna! Bijchhata and Maniprabha have conveyed to you this message that you should listen carefully. You had developed great love for them earlier, then why have you deserted them now? What is the reason behind this? "O Sri Krishna! Please come soon without any further delay, and play the same games of fun with us. Radha had shown her annoyance and for her sake you had sent us to dissuade her, in the same way you should come and play with us. (975)

O Udhav! Go and tell siam like this that when we would hear with our own ears about your going away (to Mathura) then only we will surrender all our comforts and bliss of life and feel the pangs of your separation, and wear the clothes of female ascetics or tell him that we would end our lives by consuming (eating) poison. So, O Krishna! Radha will again show her annoyance towards you." (976)

Just as you had shown us your back (given us separation) your (new found) beloved hench back woman should also ditch you (how we wish)!" (977)

"O Sri Krishna! One more thing, she had said. O Udhav! You also listen to that thing. Either you come back to Brij town, (then it is well and good) else they have stated, O True Lord! You may send your emisssaries to call back all the milkmaids. If you do not send any emissaries then you should come yourself." The poet siam has stated that in that case, you should bestow patience on them right now (so that they remain satisfied). (978)

"O Krishna! The milkmaids are always meditating on you and are always calling you by name (shouting for you). They are not bothered about the moral hesitation in the presence of their mothers or of fathers but are always remembering siam only in their hearts. They are living only by repeating your name whereas without repeating your name they feel depressed in a moment. By seeing their plight and predicament I am feeling greatly pained at heart. (979)

"They are not having any hesitation even about their parents presence and are always repeating the name of Shiam only. They fall down unconscious on the ground just as an addict (of drugs) falls down unconscious (in the absence of drugs). The poet siam has stated that they were trying to look for you in the byelanes of Kunj, just as a greedy person is always looking for money. So I would request you (on their behalf) that I am feeling equally pained and distressed on seeing them in this plight. (980)

If you are prepared to go to Brij, then nothing else could be more (welcome) appreciated; if you could not go personally, then send some emissaries. So I would earnestly request you to act on one of these proposals at least. Also listen to this thing from me that the condition of the milkmaids was as pitiable just as a fish feels out of water. Thus Udhav said, "O Krishna! Either meet them like the water (meeting fish) or bestow some peace and patience to them." (981)

The poet has stated

Swaiyya'

Krishna heard all about the plight of Brij residents from Udhav, there is an end to all joy and happiness. Sri Krishna then thought in his mind which has been brought out by the poet like this. O Udhav! I have now bestowed on those milkmaids the boon of patience and peaceful existence. (982)

Swaiyya'

Once Sri Krishna taking Udhav alongwith him went to the house of hench back woman (Kubja). On hearing this news she went forward to receive him and brought him inside the house. On seeing the beloved (Krishna) she felt the bliss of life and then placed her head at the lotus feet of Sri Krishna. She felt such a peace of mind just as the black partride or peacock feel over joyed at the burst of clouds. (986)

She was having a high pedestal house which had red coloured paintings on the walls. By taking sandal wood, incense, alongwith the flowers of katumb and kalumbak, with a lamp lighted, she arranged an arti of Sri Krishna (worship in Hindu Style). Then she arranged to spread a beautiful bedsheet on a nice cot and placed many flowers with aromatic flavour on it. Then she bowed with folded hands to Sri Krishna and requested him to be seated on this cot. (987)

Then in a sign of devoted love she brought a small cot, studded with jewels. She then asked Udhav to be seated on this cot. (988)

Swaiyya'

Udhav told Kabuja "that he had realized about her intense love for Sri Krishna. I am very humble helpless who is always very polite and without any support as such he could not be seated in the presence of Sri Krishna on this bed stead. Then she got up and arranged to remove this small cot to show the might of Sri Krishna. Then by saying this, he seated himself on the ground and held with his own hands both the lotus feet of Sri Krishna with affection. (989)

The lotus-feet (of Krishna) which Sheshnag, Sahe's, Indra and the Sun (gods) could not attain and which (lotus-feet) were mentioned in the Vedas, and Puranas, but they could not explain with examples the (knowledge) value of those lotus-feet. Infact, those lotus-feet were being contemplated upon by the Sidhas (ascetics) in their meditation and the Monis meditate upon them in their silence. Now Udhav was holding those lotus-feet with devotion and love in his hands. (990)

Those saints, who serve the lotus-feet of Sri Krishna, feel greatly elated in their hearts. These lotus-feet could not be visualised by the Yogis even, while doing meditations, which makes them restless. Even Brahma, Sheshnag, and other gods could not seek and got tired of their efforts, but could never realise their infinite vaule, so there could be no equivalent of those lotus-feet (nothing could match them). But Udhav was caressing those lotus-feet with his both hands. (991)

On one side Udhav was caressing these lotus-feet of Sri Krishna, on the other side the gardener (woman) had arranged her embellishments. She had worn jewel and rubies studded ornaments, which brought great relief and joy to the mind on their sight. In the meantime she had come near Krishna and was having a red-coloured vermillion (round) mark (bindi) on the forehead. The poet siam has stated that Krishna was thrilled to see her beauty and ornaments. (992)

The garden woman, with all the limbs decorated with oranments and with a beautiful appearance came near Krishna. It appeared as if she was having the form ot a second Chanderkala or Rati (Kamdev's spouse). The poet siam has stated that Sri Krishna realising her state of mind, pulled her towards himself. She seated herself on the same cot without any hesitation and all her fears or discomforts were gone. (993)

When Sri Krishna pulled (the hench woman) towards himself, the woman felt greatly over-joyed at heart. "O Krishna! You have met me after many days (a long time), thus the Kubaja (hench woman) told Krishna. I had rubbed the sandal wood on your body, which gave me lot of solace at heart, today Sri Krishna had made me enjoy the same experience. Whatever was the ideal of my life, I have today got it fulfilled by meeting you (today). (994)

The chapter on visiting the hench woman's house from the Bachittar Natak and the episode of completing her life's mission is completed here.

Swaiyya'

After giving mental satisfaction to the gardener (woman) Krishna went to the house of Akroor, and hearing the news of Sri Krishna's coming to his house, Akroor fell at his lotus-feet and he felt the bliss of his life throughout his body, which was seen through by Krishna. Then he took the lotus-feet of Krishna in his hands; the beauty of this scene has been described by the poet like this. Udhav then had told Krishna that he had observed the great love and affection towards him of these saints. (995)

Udhav then felt the great love of Akroor on hearing the words of Krishna; then he was reminded of the great love of Kubija (hench woman) by recalling her words. Then after great deliberations in his mind he told Krishna. O Krishna! On seeing the love of this man it seemed that the love of Kubija was nothing as compared to his (Akroor's). (996)

On perceiving the form of Sri Krishna in his heart, Akroor felt the bliss of life, and served Sri Krishna (with great zeal). At first he bowed to him and then he circumambulated around the son of Devki (Krishna) by getting up. Whatever food articles he had at home, were brought by him and offered to Krishna. (997)

Then Sri Krishna, after fulfilling his desires, came back home alongwith Udhav. On coming home he sent for those singers, who could eat well and asked them to sing songs in Ragas. The poet siam has stated that on being greatly pleased with the singers, he gave them many things as gifts (alms) from the house. It seemed that the praises sung on that day had made the days become (white) illuminating in the whole world till to date. (998)

On reaching Krishna's hosue, Akroor had bowed to Sri Jadbir (at his feet). After killing Kansa and having torn apart the chest of Baki (demon) and then hearing the episode of creating the Universe, he started singing his praises. He totally forgot about every thing else and started singing the praises of Sri Krishna alone, and was completely absorbed in his life. This had brought great relief to his heart and all his pangs of suffering (at heart) were alleviated. (999)

"O son of Devki. O sustainer of Universe (Gopal)! O benevolent Lord! He had made up his mind to sing such praises. Thus he called Krishna the killer of Kansa, the person tearing open the chest of Baki, and the creator of the Universe. O Enemy of kaisi! O killer of the demon Trinavarat with great rage! By showing your true self to us you had destroyed all our sins." (1000)

"O Shiam! You are a thief, thus you are stealing the hearts of your saints! You are thus known for bestowing gifts of peace and solace (to your saints). You are a cheat, you had cheated the milkmaids of their clothes; you are a great warrior who had killed a warrior like Kansa. You are a great weakling, being afraid of the sins; you are a great physician who had managed to keep alive all the people of the world. The poet siam has stated that you are a great scholar (pundit), who had known the whole secret (knowledge) of all the four Vedas." (1001)

The poet siam has stated that he bowed to Sri Krishna on saying these words. He praised Sri Krishna many times, and all his sufferings and afflictions were alleviated in a moment. The poet has expressed the beauty and praise of this scene like this. It appeared as if he had worn the armour (safety devices) by wearing the Lord's Name as the protective cover on his body, he fought against all the sinners (sins) but never faltered. (1002)

Then he (poet) had praised Sri Krishna like this, "O Hari (Lord)! You had destroyed (defeated) the enemy called Mur (demon). You had killed the demons Kirpurar and Karodh and had fought a fierce battle against Ravana thus killing him, and had handed over the kingdom to the enemy's brother and had returned to Ayoudhya by bringing Sita alongwith you. You had alone performed all these wonderful acts, and I know this fully well, that is why I am saying all this." (1003)

O Lachhmi's spouse! O Lord with Garuda's protection! O Lord of the Universe! You are also known by the name of Kahna, O Sri Kahna ! I only say this that all the people are your slaves (to serve you). O Lord! May you relieve me of my worldly love! Krishna had seen through such remarks being thought of, and made him engrossed in worldly love instead, and he sat down in complete silence (observing silence) (like a Moni). (1004)

Kahna then told Akroor like this

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna then said, "O Chacha! (O Uncle) Without knowing me fully, you have considered me as the True Lord, then you should talk to me in an affectionate manner, and say only those things which would bring solace to my mind. I have been ordered by Basudev (my father) that I should consider Akroor as my elder (superior) as such I have acted like this, so that you may not consider me as Ghanshyam (Lord). Saying such words, Krishna then laughed." (1005)

Hearing these words, Akroor felt very happy and then embraced both Balram and Krishna. By touching the body of Krishna, all his sufferings had disappeared. So he considered them as his little nephews only, and did not consider him as the Lord-Creator of the Universe. This episode took place there, the beauty of this scene and its prasies have been sung by the poet siam. (1006)

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna then laughed and said, "O Great warrior Akroor! Please go to Hastnapur, there my father's sister and her sons are staying, and bring me news about their welfare. The king of the place is blind, but he is blind of heart also (without any knowledge) as he is completely under the control of Daryodhana (his son). There you have to ascertain whether he was treating the sons of Pandu with regard, giving them all comforts or was ill treatig them, causing sufferings to them." (1007)

Akroor, after listening to Krishna, bowed to him and went away. What should I say about the happiness enroute, but finally court he reached Hastinapur. The poet siam has stated that he went to the King's darbar (court) in the next morning and stated like this. The king then asked him to explain all the details about Sri Krishna's killing of Kansa. (1008)

On hearing the king's words, Akroor replied to him, giving all the details, as to how Krishna had fought against the enemy. First he had called the elephant (Kawaliapir), then he had killed the wrestlers and then passing through the whole army he had approached and engaged Kansa directly (in fight). Then Kansa had taken up his sword and shield and had fought against him. Then Sri Krishna had held Kansa with his hair, thrown him on the ground and then killed him. (1009)

Akroor had seen in the King's assembly all the warriors like Bhisham Pitama, Dronacharya, Kirpacharya, Aswotham, and Dashashan. The son of the (god) sun (Karan) and Bhunsharwa (who had killed Abhimanyou) to take revenge of his brother from Arjuna, were also seen by him. The king Durayodhana, on seeing his uncle Akroor, asked him as to how was Krishna? How was Basudeva and then received him by hugging him and thus got all his (suffering) pain alleviated. (1010)

After spending some time in the king's assembly he got up and went to meet the aunt of Sri Krishna (Kunti). The poet Siam has stated that he bowed his head on seeing Kunti, at her feet. Kunti then asked about the welfare of Krishna, whose fame had spread throughout the world. In reply to her, he told her that Krishna and Basudev were all quite well and Devki was also feeling good. This news brought some solace to Kunti. (1011)

In the meantime Bidar had arrived, who bowed to the mother of Arjuna (Kunti) and asked Akroor about Krishna's welfare, and was absorbed in his love and affection completely. The poet Siam has stated that he forgot completely about everything else, and was only engrossed in his love. Then Akroor said that all were very happy and well, which gave him solace and peace of mind on hearing this, and all his affliction (worry) was removed. (1012)

Then Kunti said :

Swaiyya'

That Krishna is now doing his miracle in Mathura and why has he forgotten me from hearts and I am in great trouble here with these people here and she cried out loudly for the help of Ghan Shyam O Akroor! My spouse had died and the the children are too young (small), so I am suffering badly. Now I would like to ask you as to when Krishna would look after our welfare? (1013)

Being in distress Kunti talked about all those things, due to which the blind king was troubling them (being wrathful). O friend! Listen. Please tell Shiam like this, that he was troubling them too much, as they do not like Bhim, Arjuna's brother. Akroor then asked her in what way was he troubling them? On hearing these words, Kunti answered that "Just as a thorn in the eye causes suffering (in the same way) he was troubling." (1014)

"Please convey my request to Krishna that I am being tossed up and down in a great storm in the ocean. The poet siam has stated that she was alive only by repeating Krishna's name. The king's sons have drawn up many plans to kill my sons. So please convey to Krishna that O Lord! Without your presence I am feeling helpless." (1015)

With these words she heaved a deep sigh and then added that she had narrated all the pains and sufferings of her mind (heart) to him. He alone would listen to my tale of woes, so please tell the obstinate Krishna all about it. "O Master of Brij! O Master of the helpless! She started crying after saying, "Pray help us!" (1016)

Then Akroor said

Swaiyya'

On seeing Arjuna's mother in great distress, then Akroor said, "Your sons will be kings Krishna had a great love for you all, so he would arrange to provide you all the worldly comforts. All the good omens and signs are pointing towards you, and your sons will teach the enemies great lessons. In fact, they will only take up the reins of the kigdom and Krishna will send all your enemies to the hell. (1017)

On hearing the words of Kunti, Akroor had thought to himself. "Your son will be the king", having said these remarks, then Akroor bowed to her and started from there. To find out which side the populace was leaning, he proceeded towards the town. He found out that the residents were all interested in the well being of Kunti's sons and having found out this reality, all his doubts were cleared. (1018)

Then Akroor told Dhritrastra -

Swaiyya'

After visiting the town, Akroor went to the assembly of the king, and then addressed him like this. "O King! Please take some hints from me about politics." The king said, "Please go ahead." So he replied that you had developed great love for your children, as such yoiu had lost all love for Pandu's children. "O Dritrashtra! It appears that you have mismanaged the rules (code) of governance." (1019)

"O King! Just as Duryodhan etc. are your sons, in the same way, you should consider Pandu's children as your own. So I would request you, O King! You should not be partial to these children, and treat them without any distinction? You should keep both of them happy and satisfied, so that the world would sing your praises." Thus Akroor told the king, which would bring solace to him in the world. (1020)

On hearing these words, the king replied and told the emissary of Krishna (Akroor)! Whatever things you have told me, not a single one has appealed to my mind. You should have said (it behoved you to say) that "I should have said that "I should find out (locate) the sons of Pandu and kill them in the early morning itself. I would act according to my own wishes as it pleases me, as I cannot accept any of your proposals." (1021)

Then (the emissary) Akroor told the king that you may not accept a single proposal of mine, but if Krishna learnt about the excesses (tyranny) being perpetrated against Pandu's children, then being enraged he would punish (kill) you. So you should give affection to Pandu's children." The king then said, "Due to Krishna's annoyance why we should get frightened? But we know that you are looking for an excuse to usrup my kingdom." Then Akroor again said, "Whatever was in my mind I have told you. "Whatever was in your mind, you have stated and you know, what you have in mind. (1022)

After having said such words (things) to the king, he left this place and came to the place where powerful Kahna and Balram were seated alongwith the whole Yadav family (members of Yadav Caste). On seeing the moon-like face of Krishna he paid his obeisance by placing his head at Krishna's lotus-feet. Whatever had transpired at that place (Hastinapur) he related all details to Krishna without any reservation. (1023)

The mother of Arjuna had sent this message for you. "O Krishna! Pray listen to the request of helpless people like us. We are suffering great deal at this place, as we have no other support except you. O Krishna! Just as you had helped the elephant by alleviating his sufferings, in the same way please help me in this state of suffering. The poet siam has stated that" you may listen to our prayer with full concentration of mind and heart. (1024)

Now the battle arrangements

The Episode of the Battle of Jarasandha.

Swaiyya'

On one side, the kingdom of Mathura was handed over to king Ugrasain, on the other side the spouse of Kansa had gone to her father and she began relating her tale of woes in a state of great humility, weakness and unclean clothes to her father. She related the tale of the death (killing) of her spouse and brothers, which was troubling her mind. On listening to the whole episode from her (mouth) person, the lotus-like eyes of Jarasandh were filled with fury, and became red with anger. (1029)

Couplet

Chopaiee

He then sent his main emissaries to various countries, who brought back alongwith them all the kings. They all paid obeisance to the king (Jarasandh) and gave many valueables (wealth) as their offerings to the king. (1031)

Jarasandh had called many warriors (for help). He arranged for many weapons for them and got the elephants and horses fitted with saddles and other decorations, and decorated them with plumes on their heads. (1032)

Many army units of infantry and chariots armed with bows and weapons, armoured) got collected (gathered) and they all bowed to the King, and went to their units, and were arranged in formations, (1033)

Thus many faceted army was organised by Jarasandh, he also wore his protective armour and rode his chariot armed with bows, arrows and quiver. (1034)

By collecting all the army formations and the various ministers, he organised the whole show. By taking along the army of various colours and formations he sounded the battle drum and started pushing forward, just as the waters of oceans had overflown on the doomsday. (1035)

Great many elephants were arranged like mountains, and the infantry was arranged in between like the fish. The wheels of the chariots were like whirlpools, which produced the praises of the scene in the mind of the poet who stated like this. The horses were like crocodiles, while the spears were shining like the waves of ocean. It was like an ocean or the huge army formations of Jarasandh and Mathura appeared like the sandy patch in between. (1036)

The warriors in this huge army will be described in the next episode and I will first describe the praises of the warriors who had fought against Krishna with great fury. Those warriors who fought against Balram will be detailed first to please the saintly persons. By giving up all worldly greed, I will sing the praises of the Lord alone at first. (1037)

If we win, so much the better and if we lose, and die, then we would win praises from all. (1039)

Then Sri Krishan got up in rage, and said with great force. "Who amongst is a great warrior, who would face and fight against the enemy? Who would preserve his might and fight against the demons and kill them, thus terminating their whole existence on Earth. Then he would kill the warriors and make the spirits, crows and demigod and others (pleased) happy by supplying them with flesh of warriors and please them. (1040)

When Sri Krishna addressed like this, none of them could bring so much patience in the mind, and seeing Krishna they all appeared with mouths ajar (opened) and all were in a mood of fleeing from there. The pride of the Kashatriyas melted like the hailstones. Then king Ugrasain roared like this- "Will none of you dare to oppose the enemy?" (1041)

When no one came forward with enough patience (or valour) and all were afraid of fighting, rather wanted to run away. All were planning to flee but none of them wore the bow and arrows with a rage or fury. Then Krishna arose from his seat and said, just as a lion roars to kill an elephant. The beauty of this scene has risen in the poet's mind that by hearing the sound of his words even the clouds of monsoon (Savan) were put to shame (felt completely ashamed). (1042)

Then Kahna said -

Swaiyya'

"O King! Do not have any sense of fear or dejection. We both the brothers will go out to fight it out. We will fight in the battle field with bows and arrows, swords, maces etc. In case the enemy will attack us with fury, we will take their life out (of body) with the help of arrows only. We would surely kill them and will never falter with fear and will never retrace our steps backwards. (1043)

With these words both the brothers stood up and came near their parents. On coming there, they bowed to the mother and father and placed their heads at their feet. The love of Basudev and Devki knew no bounds, and embraced their sons, bestowing their blessings on them saying that you will defeat the demons, whereas the enemy would run away from the battle field just as wind blows away the clouds. (1044)

Both, paying their obeisance to the parents and leaving their house, came out. Immediately on coming out they took up their arms (weapons) and called out all the warriors from the town to accompany them. Sri Krishna distributed many gifts (alms) to the brahmins and both the brothers felt greatly elated in mind (at heart). The brahmins then blessed them that they would kill all the enemies and come back home being victorious in the battle. (1045)

On seeing the army of Yadvas, with them, Sri Krishna then thundered like the cloud's thunder and roared like this to the charioteer. (1046)

Kahna then told the charioteer-

Swaiyya'

O charioteer! Prepare my chariot with great embellishments for going to the battle field and place the weapons like swords, wheel (revoling), and mace inside. I have to go for killing the enemy alongwith all the Yadvas. The charioteer asked, "What for are you going?" and Krishna replied, "You listen from me, that we are going for reducing the tension and suffering of our king. (1047)

`Couplet

After saying these words, Krishna tied the quiver to his waist. Balram also armed himself with a hoe and mace and took some Yadvas alongwith him. (1048)

Swaiyya'

By taking great warriors alongwith him to kill the demons, Krishna started from there. He took Balram alongwith him, whose power was known to Vishnu (Sri's spouse) only. What was the value of Bhisham Pitama even before him in power (strength), or Parus Ram and great bowman Ravana even? So Sri Krishna left alongwith powerful Balram, who was a proud warrior, for killing the enemies. (1049)

By tying swords to the waist and taking bows in hand and riding a chariot, Sri Krishna left for the battlefield. He was talking nectar like words as to where were the lotus-feet of the Lord. "That moment Balram armed with his hoe, with great force, attacked the enemy forces. (1050)

On seeing the enemy forces, Sri Krishna became furious with rage. He raced his chariot to the place, and did not fear the commander of the forces. By stretching the bow, he killed many elephants and horses with piercing arrows, who were decorated with great weapons. It appeared as if Indra's armour (mace) had shaken the peaks of sumer mountain, which had fallen on the ground, being broken. (1051)

Sri Krishna's bow had shot many arrows which had killed many warriors. The arrows killed the infantry, and were relieving some of their chariots, sending many enemies to the land of death (hill). Many warriors from the battle field had fled away and those with some (shame) honour or respect had come back to Krishna for waging a war against the enemy. Some soldiers were given such a treatment by Sri Krishna that they never returned alive to their homes. (1052)

The warriors in the battle field were filled with fury, and cries and challenges were being thrown on them from all the four corners. They were fighting in the battle being encouraged and urged (for fighting) with great enthusiasm and were not afraid of Sri Krishna even a little bit. Then Sri Krishna, taking his bow, within no time (shot some arrows) which cut short their pride. Whosoever came forward with bows were faced with death by Krishna's (arrows). (1053)

Kabit

Balram had caused a blood stream to flow as he cut the enemies into pieces with his onslaughts. The horses and elephants were killed while the charioteers were divested of their chariots. Many infantry troops were also killed just as the lion kills deer (in the jungle). Just as Shiva kills all the worldly beings in his wrath, similarly Krishna had killed the enemies. That is how I have got some idea in my mind. There were some (men) fallen on the ground being wounded, some others were killed while some more were getting frightened (with fear) and some others were defeated, who had no resistance left in the body. (1054)

Swaiyya'

Then Sri Krishna thundered like the clouds and shot his arrows in a stream (shower) just as Indra (god) arranges showers of rain. The multi-coloured army was killed, with blood flowing every where, while the battle field became red-coloured (with blood). There were heads seen somewhere while at places heaps of broken chariots were seen, at other places the belly straps of horses were lying on the ground. Sri Krishna shot some arrows in a great fury, which caused many warriors to fall down on the ground, with their mutilated (bodies) limbs lying around. (1055)

Many warriors of the enemy had fought against Sri Krishna and got killed while some of them were lying on the ground. (wounded), with their bows, arrows, swords and maces (or other weapons) in their hands, but finally had fallen on the ground after fighting their last battle. The vultures had eaten their flesh, but were sitting quitely in a saddened mood. It appeared as if the daughters of the warriors could not digest all that and they were fluttering with great force in their chests. (1056)

Balram then got enraged and held his sword in hand and rushed into the enemy force with great wrathfulness. In the battlefield he killed many warriors and was not afraid of the enemy commanders even slightly. After killing their elephants, horses charioteers, and army generals, he had blunted their might. Just as Bhumasur (demon) had fought against Indra, in the same way Balram, Sri Krishna's brave brother, had fought in the battle. (1057)

The brother of Krishna (Balram) was engrossed in the battlefield, at times he was furious with rage, while at other times he appeared like Duryodhana. Or he was trying to find his (seek his) death time like. Bhisham Pitama and was like Rama in waging war, or he was like Angad or Hanuman or god of death (Yamraj). Thus Balram was fighting furiously in the battle with great rage. (1058)

Taking his hoe with great strength and rage, Balram had rushed into the enemy lines. He had killed many elephants and horses while charioteers were driven out from their chariots and destroyed the infantry men also. Kal, Narad and the spirits including Shiva were getting elated on watching the new battle scenes. The enemy forces were completely overawed just as the deer gets frieghtened on seeing the lion, as if Balram was like a lion. (1059)

On one front Balram was waging the war, while on the other side Sri Krishna was wielding his sword. He had killed the riders of horses and charioteers alongwith the masters of the elephants and was challenging the enemy with great fury. Holding his bows and arrows alongwith he destroyed many huge flocks of the enemy formations. It appeared as if Sri Krishna, like a storm of wind, had dispersed the clouds of monsoon (July season) of the enemy army formations. (1060)

When Sri Krishna held his horrible looking huge bow in hand, then a shower of arrows was struck which made the enemy furious with great suffering due to losses. The multi-coloured army was wounded badly, and the soliders fell down on the ground and all were bodily steeped in blood. It appeared as if Brahma had created the fifteenth region (world) of red colour. (1061)

Sri Krishna was the harbinger of suffering for the demons and had waged a war with great wrathfulness, keeping the prestige of army high (by fighting against them). Then suddenly he had raced his chariot towards the thick of battle, without incurring (having) any fear of the enemy strength. Holding his bow and arrows Sri Krishna was roaming around the battle field like a lion. Infact, Krishna had punished the enemy forces, unwilling to surrender, with completely routing them and killing them, thus reducing the enemy formations into Shambles in no time. (1062)

Sri Krishna (Madh Soodan) had held his bow and arrow in the battle-field and had jumped into the fray without any hesitation or fear and had killed the enemy forces. Sri Krishna had with his pointed arrows, destroyed the enemy forces like cotton spinning just as a comber spins the cotton with his carder's comb. There was a stream of blood flowing n the battle field and as if appeared as if an eighth ocean (of blood) had been created at that place. (1063)

On one side Sri Krishna's forces were attacking whereas on the other side the king Jarasandh had attacked with a great force of powerful army. The warriors had fought the battle with various weapons like bows and arrows, or swords in hand, thus their limbs were being cut into pieces. At places the masters of elephants and horses had fallen on the ground whereas the warriors or their limbs were scattered at other places. Both the forces had mingled into each other just like Ganga and Jamuna rivers mingling with each other (while fighting furiously). (1064)

To complete the functions (duty) alloted by their masters, the warriors from both the sides attacked each others without fear and a ferocious (fierce) battle ensued with great fury as all were filled with the fighting mood. The warriors fought facing each other without retracing even a step backwards. A shining body gets pierced with a spear and it appeared as if a sandalwood tree had a reptile wrapped around it. (1065)

Both the sides fought the battle with great wrathfulness, and from both sides none managed to falter (or retrace). With a spear in hand or holding an arrow and bow, mace and sword they were fighting the battle. Some one had fallen down while fighting, while another was fighting in great elated spirit while someone was frightened seeing the terrible battle scene while someone was lying down in a terrified state. The poet has described the battle scene as it the warriors were burning themselves like the moth on the lamp of the battle. (1066)

At first Balram, Krishna's brother, had fought with his bow and arrows with a spear in hand he showed his prowess in the battle. Then he fought with a sword in hand and with a thrust in the enemy ranks, he had killed many soldiers. Then holding his mace he killed many enemy warriors and then with his dagger he had killed many more troops. He pulled many warriors from the enemy ranks with his hoe just as a fisherman pulls his net from the river. (1067)

If an enemy tried to face him in battle, Sri Krishna would manage his fall with his powerful strike. Those, with more egoistic tendency, would give a tough fight but none of them would go back alive. Then piercing with a thrust into the enemy lines, Sri Krishna engaged them in fierce fighting. Then Sri Krishna with great perseverance made the enemy forces retreat with great losses (in life). (1068)

Couplet

Then multi-faceted army was fleeing away and the king (Jarasandh) had seen this scene with his own eyes, then he addressed those tough warriors around him like this. (1069)

The king Jarasandh told his army -

Swaiyya'

Where Krishna was fighting, to go to that side, and attack Krishna's body with weapons like arrows (andbow), Sword, mace etc in hand, and do not allow any Yadav to go back alive, and kill them all in the battle-field. Thus the king addressed his troops, so that the formations moved towards that side, where a fierce battle was going on. (1070)

With the orders of the king, the warriors made a dash like the dark clouds. The arrows were being shot like a shower, while the sword was shining like the lightning and the arrows were striking like the thunder of clouds. There were some lying on the ground, thus breathing the last breath while some others had been killed with mutilated limbs, some others were lying wounded in the battle field and were shouting "kill them, kill the enemy" from the mouth. (1071)

Sri Krishna, holding his bow in hand, was shooting arrows thus killing all the enemy warriors and by cutting through the chariots, the charioteers were divested of their chariots. By seeing the wounded soliders, with their wailing, fearing their own death some were fleeing from the battle field. It appeared as if in the face of virtue like Sri Krishna, the sins had given way in total surrender. (1072)

There were many mutilated heads lying in the battle filed but they were shouting by mouth, "Kill the enemy." Many headless trunks were running around in the battlefiled and were heading towards the side, where Sri Krishna was fighting. Whosoever was coming in their way, was being attacked by them, mistaking him for Krishna. Even when someone fell down dead on the ground, he would not let his sword fall from hand. (1073)

Kabit

Both the enemies, were filled with great fury and were not leaving the battle field. They were fighting spiritedly in great elation with beating of drums. The gods in heavens were watching all this. The demigods and musicians (of Shiva) were praisng with showering flowers, just as raindrops were falling from the clouds. Many were dying fighting and many more wee being wedded to the fairies while some others were being eaten away by vultures while many had fallen on the ground being wounded. Some others were still frightened to see the state of the battle-field whereas some others were full of their prestige and were attacking the enemy while shouting war cries. (1074)

Swaiyya'

Many warriors had fallen on the ground being wounded but would again, getting up, join the fighting odds. Many were shouting furiously, "Where was Shiam (Krishna) hiding?" On hearing such cries (words) from the enemy forces, Sri Krishna taking up his sword, faced them directly. Even those, who had their heads cut off, were not relenting, and were rushing towards Krishna. (1075)

That time cries of "Kill them kill them", "were being heard, and the warriors with swords in hand and shouting slogans would jump in the fray. Krishna and Balram had been surrounded from all the four sides, and the battle-field had taken the form of a wrestling arena. At that moment Sri Krishna took up his bow and arrows, and seeing this, many weaklings started fleeing from the battle-filed. It appeared as if the game play of the battle-field had finished while the onlookers (crowds) having seen the fun of games were going back to their homes. (1076)

The warrior, who would attack Sri Krishna with a sword in hand and full of fury, would join the musicians of Shiva, on seeing this wonderful drama, in singing his praises. Some were saying that Sri Krishna would be victorious whereas some others would favour the other side for a win and thus they would be engrossed in discussion which would continue till Sri Krishna would strike (the enemy) him down on the ground. Many expert archers, armed with protective devices would attack with a flock of elephants and with dancing horses. Many warriors, who were seen patiently taking part in the battle and liable to gain the masters praises, were coming out of their covered places (alongwith troops) and with beating drums would take part in the battle. Taking hold of their sabres, and with unsheathed swords and shouting for killing the enemy, the warriors were attacking in the battle field. They would fight against Sri Krishna without faltering from the position, but finally they were falling down on the ground, and then get woundded on getting up again. (1078)

Swaiyya'

With a great furious cry, they would attack without being afraid of Sri Krishna, but would strike with their weapons. They were wounded, with blood oozing out of the body, but with a sword in hand, they were fighting with great prowess. At that moment Balram with a mace in hand, would strike and disperse them like the sifting of rice in the battle field. Then he would attack with his hoe, which would result in their falling down on the ground, and none would be left alive. (1079)

All the warriors of Sri Krishna, with swords in hand, would attack with (such) a fury on the enemy. Infact, both sides had fought with great wrathfulness, and the jackals evil spirits and vultures were fully satiated (with eating flesh). The warriors from both sides had fallen on the ground, who had fought with great wrathfulness. The warriors who had fought with daggers in hand and got wounded. On seeing this scene, the gods were saying that the mothers, who had given birth to such warriors, were really praise-worthy. (1080)

The rest of the warriors also had come to the battle field with great fury, and from the other side the army of Yadava's also moved forward and they engaged the enemy in a fierce battle. They fought using bows and arrows, swords, maces and spears. By piercing through the army of Yadavas, all fell upon Sri Krishna jointly. (1081)

The warriors were armed with wheels, tridents, maces, and other weapons alongwith swords and daggers. They were shouting to kill them all, thus they were attacking and inflicted wounds on the enemy and these powerful soldiers were not willing to falter from the fighting. Thus Krishna had destroyed the whole enemy forces. The poet has described the beauty of this scene as if the elephant like Krishna had pierced through the pond of the battle-field and destroyed the whole lot of lotus flowers of the enemy. (1082)

They were afraid of the arrows of Sri Krishna and they did not have any peace or perseverance. All the enemy forces were trembling and were retreating, and got dispersed, and none dared to continue fighting in the battle field. On seeing Balram's hoe and (wooden) pestle in hand, all the enemy forces were fleeing, and none could face the enemy in battle, just as the flock of deer runs away on seeing a lion cub. (1083)

Then all the warriors, fleeing from the battle front, in a dilapidated state, reached upto Jarasandh and said, "O Master! In your living presence, Balram and Krishna had killed all the soldiers with great fury and wrathfulness. Many had been killed and none of them was left alive, while many warriors were lying down in the battle field. So pray listen to our request that they had won the battle and your army had been defeated. (1084)

That moment Jarasandh got furious and sent for many more warriors. On getting the king's orders, all the warriors rushed towards Sri Krishna for killing him. They attacked Sri Krishna, with various weapons like arrows and bows, swords and maces, etc. in the form of a bursting 'cloud. They fell upon Sri Krishna in a joint venture, just as the cranes come in waves by joining each other. (1085)

They came rushing in a furious bid, and challenging Sri Krishna, they attacked him engaging him in a fierce battle. With weapons like arrows, bows, swords and maces in hand, they were matching the enemy onslaughts vigorously. They were wounded themselves but had inflicted some injuries to Sri Krishna's body as well with their weapons. In the meantime Balram came running with his hoe and pestle and killed most of the enemy troops. (1086)

Sri Nar Singh, powerful Gaj Singh and Dham Singh, armed with arrows proceeded further. The great warrior Har Singh and Raja Ran Singh, after giving alms to Brahmins, also came forward towards Sri Krishna and fought against him, thus killing many warriors and a huge army. Many arrows were shot at Sri Krishnna and they said, "Victory will be ours." (1088)

So many kings joined together and started shooting arrows at Sri Krishna. They fought a fierce battle with great fury and fought against Sri Krishna with two steps advanced more than him. Without caring for their lives, they were engrossed in the fighting mood, and they were dressed in white apparels, which were coloured in red with (due to blood) stains. (1089)

The great warriors engaged Sri Krishna in a fierce battle just as Arjan had fought against Karan, being enraged. With great fury they killed many troops then Balram stood firm against them, just like a pillar dug up in the Earth (ground). The soliders, roaming around with spears in hand, had surrounded Baldev just as a drunken elephant having broken his chains, gets surrounded by the watchmen armed with spears. (1090)

A great battle was raging in the battle-field and all the warriors, who came forward, were killed there and then. Sri Krishna also fought a fierce battle, while the warriors from the other side were equally furious. Sri Nar Singh then shot an arrow at Sri Krishna, and there was no one equal in prowess to him. The poet has been impressed with praise of this scene as if a lion had been awoken from his shumber. (1091)

The arrow had struck the chest of Sri Krishna and had pierced inside upto its ends (wings), and the arrow was covered with his blood, seeing which Sri Krishna was filled with great wrath-fulness. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet as if the bird garuda had swallwed the off spring of a snake by holding it. (1092)

Sri Krishna, filled with great fury stretched his bow fixing an arrow in it and shot this sorrow suddenly onto Gaj Singh, and he fell down on the ground, as if he was strung by a snake. Then the arrow was pointed towards Har Singh, who was standing closeby, but seeing its direction he ran away from there. It appeared as if by perceiving the lion, the rabbit could not stay there and slipped from there. (1093)

When Har Singh had left the battle-fileld (due to fear), then Ram Singh got ready to fight as he was filled with anger. He took up his bow and arrows and fought with great prowess in the battle field. He then challenged Sri Krishna in the battle field, and said, "O Krishna! Where are you running away? Wait there for a moment as you have been caught in the clutches of death." (1094)

When Ram Singh shouted like this, Har Singh laughed. He also took up his bow and faced Sri Krishna for a fight, and did not retreat even a step from the battle-field. He addressed Sri Krishna in a great rage that he had recognised his true worth from all these signs and qualities. "You have come to fight against me thus inviting your death straight away." (1095)

On hearing these words, Śri Krishna laughed and took up his bow. Then appreciating the height of enemy's body and pointing to his head (of the enemy) he shot an arrow. Then the arrow struck Har Singh and his head fell down on the ground, being cut off, while his trunk was still standing. It appeared as if the peak of sumer mountain had been removed or the sun had set. (1096)

When Har Singh was killed, then Ram Singh attacked Sri Krishna and fought a fierce battle with his weapons like bow and arrow, sword and mace etc. in his hands. On seeing his proctective cover on his body the poet has stated like this. It appeared as it a drunken elephant, getting enraged in the wood, had attacked the lion. (1097)

He rushed forward and started his fight against Sri Krishna, holding his mace in hand, but Sri Krishna took up his revolving Sudarshan wheel and with tilted eye-brows he let go the wheel with great fury. (1098)

Then Ram Singh took up his spear and threw it at Sri Krishna for killing him. It suddenly struck Sri Krishna and pierced through his arm, coming out from the other side. It was stuck in Krishna's body, and the poet has (praised) described the beauty of the scene as if in the hot season a snake has appeared around the sandal wood treee. (1099)

Sri Krishna then taking out the spear from his body, threw it at the enemy. It appeared as if the lightning had crossed through the clouds of arrows, or the rays of the sun had been lengthened (withdrawn). It struck the body of the enemy and pierced through his chest appearing from the other side. It seemed as if Kalka, covered with blood having killed Sumbh had been directed at Nisumb. (1100)

When Ram Singh had been killed with the striking spear, then Dhan Singh came forward with great fury. He took up his javelin in his hand and challenging loudly, he threw it at Krishna. On seeing the spear coming towards him, Sri Krishna took up his sword and cut this spear into two pieces. The javelin fell on the ground in two pieces, as if the (bird) Garuda had killed a great snake. (1101)

Having saved himself from the enemy strike, Sri Krishna rushed towards the enemy with his bow and the battle was raging for four auspicious moments, but Krishna was neither wounded nor he had been injured. The enemy shot an arrow at Krishna, while from the other side, Krishna also struck an arrow with great strength. The enemy was watching Krishna's face, while Krishna was smiling looking at enemy face. (1102)

In the meantime, a warrior from Sri Krishna's army, with sword in hand, rushed towards Dhan Singh. He fell upon the enemy like an elephant attacking the lion, while Dhan Singh, taking his bow, shot an arrow at him, and cutting his head (from body) threw it on the ground, just as a deer cannot escape from the mouth of cobra. Another solider of Sri Krishna got furious and took up his bow, and started shooting arrows at the persevearing Dhan Singh, a geat warrior, without any fear, but Dhan Singh, with his sword in had, cut away his forehead. It appeared as if a surveyor had plucked a blooming lotus flower from the pond. (1104)

After killing two warriors of Sri Krishna, Dhan Singh with his bow in hand, saw the enemy army, and launched an attack. At the outset he killed many elephants and horses, and killed many charioteers alongwith infantry men, and a fierce battle was raging. The sword was being wielded like a burning wooden log, on perceiving which the king's umbrella was feeling belittled (ashamed). Another beauty came to mind that Krishna had sent his revolving wheel on seeing Bhishma Pitama coming forward. (1105)

Then Dham Singh, with his bow and fully enraged, rushed towards the enemy troops, thus cutting many chariots and killed many elephants and horses also, which could not be enumerated (counted) (which were countless) and he fought bravely. Many warriors had been sent to hell and then he proceeded towards Sri Krishna with great fury. He was shouting to kill the enemy, which terrified the whole of the Yadava army. (1106)

When Dhan Singh had killed many of the Yadav troops, then Sri Krishna became furious with rage, and with tittled eyes said. (1107)

Krishna addressed the army thus -

Swaiyya'

"What are you waiting for I know you have lost all strength; with Dhan Singh's shooting arrows, you have started retreating just like the flock of goats moving back at the sight of the lion. You have retraced your steps like-wise, without keeping your weapons intact. You have bcome a weakling and terrified at his sight. Neither you have died in war nor you have killed the enemy." (1108)

On hearing these words of Sri Krishna, all the warriors, grinding their teeth, became furious with rage. By holding their bows and arrows they launched on attack on Dham Singh fearlessly. Dhan Singh, with his bow in hand, cut off many heads of the enemy troops, throwing them onto the ground. It appeared as if with a strong gust of wind, many flowers had been plucked and thrown around. (1109)

`Kabit

With great fury the warriors came forward but in the battle field they were cut into pieces, when they facd Dhan Singh in the battle field. Many more fighting the last battle with increated vigour, and with weapons in hand, rushed towards the battlefield, but Dhan Singh, with greater ruthlessness and stretching his bow, cut off their heads from the body. It appeared as if Indra (god) was worshipping the Earth with lotus flowers on perceiving the patience of Earth. (1110)

Swaiyya'

Sri Dhan Singh was fighting fiercely in the battle-field and had killed many warriors and any other warriors trying to face him were also killed, as if the wind had scattered all the clouds. The elephants of the Yadava army had been killed in flocks, and they were falling on the ground, as if with Indra's heavy cudgal many great mountains had been shaken up or fallen down. (1111)

Being furious with rage, and holding his sword in hand, Dhan Singh had killed many (warriors of the enemy) alongwith many elephants, and many elephatns had run away out of fear, which formed the main force of the enemy. The poet Siam has stated that the beauty of the scene could be expressed like this. It appeared as if out of fear of Indra's arrival, many mountains had taken to wings or disappeared with the use of wings. (1112)

Thus Dhan Singh had fought a fierce battle and no warrior could face him. Whosoever came forward being enraged in the battle field, was not allowed to go back alive, and was felled onto the ground. Just as Ravana had fought against Ram with great zeal and wrathfulness, in the same manner Dhan Singh had fought bravely, but he was fleeing after killing all the seven-coloured army (multi faceted army). (1113)

The mighty Dhan Singh then challenging Krishna said, "O Krishna! Listen. Now do not run away from the battle field. So try to hold yourself with courage and fight with me, (alone) instead of getting your men killed in vain. So O Baldev! Take up your bow and come to fight with me facing me squarely. There is nq parallel to the battle or as good a function (formal action) in both the worlds, which could earn you due praise. (1114)

On hearing these words of the foe and his tall talk, Krishna was filled with great fury and wrathfulness. So taking hold of his bow and arrows, sword and mace etc (weapons) Sri Krishna launched his energy towards a battle and taking up his bow, he did not falter a bit. With shooting a stream of arrows, first he fought against Balram. (1115)

On one side Balram was full of fury while on the other side Dhan Singh was equally ruthless and both fought a fierce battle. Both their bodies ware red with blood, oozing from wounds. "Kill them, Kill them," was the war-cry heard from both sides. The enemy had forgotten everything else except the battle, with the raging battle (had lost its confidenre). The poet Ram has said that they fought each other just as a lion fights against another lion or an elephant against an elephant. (1116)

When Balram used to attack, Dhan Singh would, saving himself, launch a reverse attack against Balram with sword in hand, with equal vehemence, rushing forward against Balram. When Sri Krishna his brother was in great distess, then he also moved forward towards the enemy by taking Yadav army alongwith him, and surrounded Dhan Singh, just as the moon is encircled by many millions of stars at night. (1117)

When Dhan Singh was surrounded, then Gaj Singh, who was standing close by, rushed forward. Then Balram saw him coming, and he ascended his chariot and moved towards him, and did not allow him to come near Krishna, and engaged him in between with his shooting arrows. So Gaj Singh could not move further and remained standing there. It appeared as if the elephants feet had been chained in his position. (1118)

That poet Ram has stated that Sri Krishna was fighting against Dhan Singh and none of the two was being killed in action. Then Krishna, filled with furry, and taking his revolving wheel, let it swing (go) in the battle field with great strength, which cut off Dhan Singh's head, while his trunk, fallen on the ground, was jumping up and down in great pain, just as a fish is thrown out of a water pool. When Dhan Singh was killed, then Yadvas blew their conch-shells while fighting with Krishna and proceeded to heavens. Where Gaj Singh was standing, he got bewildered by seeing this miracle. Then those of his fleeing warriors who were saved, came to him and told him "that the survivors had come to you." (1120)

Hearing such words from them, the mighty Gaj Singh got infuriated. The poet siam has stated that he rushed towards Balram on seeing him on one side, and then he fought a fierce battle with him, leaving all his companions, without any reservation, and he asked, "Where was Krishna?" The warrior Dhan Singh was a true fighter who had gone to heavens after fighting vigorously and he deserved all praise. (1121)

He thought to himself with great love that it was better to stay in heavens as compared to this Earth. Then the mighty Gaj Singh took up his big spear, filled with great rage, The poet siam has stated, that he said "O Balram! Where are you going (to hide)?" Then he threw that spear with great force of the hand on Balram's body, the brother of Sri Krishna. (1122)

Holding the spear in hand, which was coming towards him, Balram took up this action. Then the chariot was stopped and the spear was struck under the umbrella, and the blade of spear cut across the umbrella onto the other side. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet like this. It appeared as if on the cliff of Kalindri (The Jamuna mountain) the fangs of cobra, enraged furiously, had protruded through the umbrella. (1123)

With great force and strength Balram pulled out that spear and then turning it around with his hand, he swirled it in a tilted manner. It shone forth so strongly as if the tail-end star had shown its brightness in the sky. Balram, with a great fury had shot it towards Gaj Singh. It appeared as if the Yamraj's (the god of death) mighty mace had (shone) appeared in its glory, for killing the king Prikshit in the battle-field. (1124)

Gaj Singh tried his best to escape from this onslaught but could not save himself and finally the great spear struck his chest. All the other kings were watching and were slapping their heads shouting "Alas alas," and were feeling sorry for him. He (Gaj Singh) was wounded badly and he fell down unconsious but did not leave the arrow from hand. Thus Gaj Singh fell down in the chariot just as the body of a great elephant falls from the mountain top. (1125)

When Gaj Singh regained consciousness, he held his great bow and stretched it, and streching his bow upto the ears, he shot the arrow with full vigour and force. Those arrows, becoming umpteen from one arrow, were pouring like hell. The poet has described the praise of this scene like this. It appeared as if Tachhak with millions of snakes, came at the feet of Balram, like the covering wind. (1126)

But not a single arrow could strike Balram, then Gaj Singh said like this. "Sheshnag, Indra, Sun, Kuber (mountain) Shiva, moon, Garuda etc. had given you protection." Let all of the warriors listen to me that so far I have killed all those whom I wanted to kill. But seeing you alive, I am bewildered as to how your body was still living (alive). (1127)

Having addressed Balram like this, he pulled up a heavy spear and threw it at him, but Balram, with bow in hand, had seen this spear approaching him. With great strength he suddenly cut it into pieces and felled it on the ground. It appeared as if the flying snake had been caught by Garuda, which was killed by him with great ruthlessness. (1128)

Then Gaj singh, getting furious, threw the spear at the enemy, which struck the body of Balram, which caused him great pain and suffering on striking him, its blade had pierced his body, through to the other side. The beauty of this scene has been expressed by the poet like this. It appeared as if a tortoise had raised its head from the stream of Ganga waters. (1129)

On being struck with the spear, Balram pulled it out and threw it out of the chariot, but being unconscious he fell down on the ground, but did not die. It appeared as if a huge tree had fallen (mythological tree), which was studded with the godly grandeur. When he regained consciousness he forgot all about its fear, and stood upright again, and was furious with rage. Seeing the chariot, he again jumped onto it. It appeared as if the lion had climbed, with a jump, onto the mountain. (1130)

Then the mighty warrior again got engaged in a fight with Gaj Singh without any fear. He then fought a great battle taking up his weapons like bow arrow, sword, and mace etc. He cut all the arrows of the enemy pointing at him, with his arrows. The poet siam has stated that the mighty warrior did not retreat a single step even from the battle field. (1131)

Then Balram, taking up his hoe and pestle in hand, fought vigorously with the enemy. However, Gaj Singh took up his javelin (spear) in hand and shot it with great strength towards Balram. On seeing the spear coming towards him, he cut its blade with his hoe and threw it on to the ground. When it was divested of its blade, then Gaj Singh struck it with force on the body of Balram. (1132)

Gaj Singh, then wielding his sword, struck it on Balram, which Balram saved by taking the shield in hand. When the sword struck the shield's steel cover, there was a spark seen coming out, and its beauty has been expressed by the poet, like this. It appeared as if during the night of a monsoon period the lightning sparkle had revealed the stars (in the sky). (1133)

Having borne the brunt of enemy with his sword in hand, which pierced through his throat and cutting his head threw it on the ground. Thus (Gaj Singh) was thrown out of his diamond studded chariot. The poet has praised the beauty of this scene like this. It appeared as if the sun-like head, from the strata of star-lit sky, had fallen on the Earth, being hit by the gods. (1134)

When Gaj Singh was killed, all other warriors (of enemy force) fled away from the battle-field. Seeing the corpses, covered with blood all over, they were terrified and losing their patience, they fled as if they had been awakened from their night's dream. When all the five kings had been killed, the fleeing warriors went upto their king (Jarasandh) and told him like this. Having heard this news, (the rest of) the army lost its morale and patience. The king's heart bled with desperation and was silenced with wrathfulness. (1135)

Here the chapter on the death of Gaj Singh from the war-like narration of Krishnavtar is completed.

Couplet

The king (Jarasandh) had mighty warriors like Arung Singh, Achal Singh, Amit Singh, Amar Singh and Anugh Singh who were great charioteers and war-veterans. (1136)

Swaiyya'

On perceiving these five warriors, the king Jarasandh armed himself with weapons and then challenging them shouted with rage. "Look! (O warriors!) This Krishna had killed five powerful kings in the battle-field (of ours), you go and fight against him, leaving all fears and reservations, and beat the war-drums without fear. On hearing such words of the master, all the kings, full of rage and fury, advanced towards the battle field. (1137)

On approching the battle-field they saw Krishna in the form of Yama (god of death). Taking up their bows and arrows, they challenged Balram in the battle-field. Having his sword tied tightly around his waist, with coat of arms protective cover and with a spear in hand, Arung Singh challenged Krishna. "O Krishna! Come and fight against me. What are you waiting for?" He uttered such words. (1138)

Immediately Sri Krishna saw those five warriors in the battle field, he challenged them for a fight. So Sri Krishna, alongwith his army, advanced forward beating the war drums. They were armed with straps, swords, aexs, and guns and launched the attack with great fury. From both the sides, the warriors were being killed, who were falling on the ground like drug-addicts. (1139)

A fierce battle was raging there. All the gods came in their heavenly chariots to watch the battle. The poet Siam has stated that they (gods) had come to watch the fun in the battle-field, with great joy in their hearts. With the striking of arrows, (or weapons) the warriors falling on the ground from their horses, and then getting up again, they were fighting. Their praises were being sung by the musicians of Shiva (Kinar and gandharab). (1140)

Kabit

Many warriors had run away from the battle-field, many more were roaring on coming to the battle-filed, who were fighting against Krishna, rushing towards him, whereas many warriors had fallen on the ground, while many others were fighting against drunken elephants. Whosoever was coming to fight, was soon falling dead on the ground. Many others were shouting to kill the enemy (kill them), with their weapons being wielded, who were not retracing (their feet) even a step from the battle field. The battle field had become a sea of blood with weapons as fire of destruction, with the striking arrows as wind, and the warriors were burning therein like straw. (1141)

Swaiyya'

The mighty Arung Singh became furious with rage, when he realized that the war was raging to a finish. Then riding his chariot, taking up the arrows and fixing them on the bow, he stretched it (bow) to the ears, he fell upon the army of Sri Krishna and killed all the troops. On seeing the king, the enemy forces ran away from the battle-field just as darkness goes away on seeing the rays of the sun. (1142)

Holding a grand great sword in hand, alongwith the shield and cajoling (riding) his horse, he came in front of the whole army. He fought against some Yadvas, and did not retrace a step back due to fear. Killing many other warriors, he finally faced Sri Krishna directly, and said. "I have vowed that I will not go back home without either killing you or being killed myself. (1143)

Having said like this, and holding his sword, he challenged the army of Krishna. From the Yadva army one warrior, named Sunder, came forward, who was looking very smart in the battle-field, and motivating his horse, he came in front of the king (facing him). The king cut off his head in no time, without any delay. The head was removed from the body which fell on the ground just as a star falls on the ground, being strewn from the sky. (1144)

The poet siam has stated that Arung Singh then fell upon the Yadava army in great wrathfulness, while the Yadava warriors also joined together and came back, thus launching an attack with great fury and challenge. The king fired a shot from his gun. The warriors got burnt with gunshots just as straw gets burnt in fire. Many warriors had lost their limbs. It appeared as if dry grass was lying and burning in the fire-pit of Yagna (sacrifical fire). (1145)

By stretching the bow, and pointing the arrows at warriors (enemy), they were shooting the arrows, and whichever strikes a person, it cuts him into two from the middle and the body falls on the ground. With swords and axes in hand, they were striking at the body of Sri Krishna. Being tired of fighting and getting desperate Krishna was not getting a chance (time) to save himself from the strike. (1146)

The warriors, who came to attack him, were made to flee by the (Yadava) warriors, filled with furry and wrath. With bow and arrows, swords and maces etc. in their hands they had made some charioteers lose their chariots. Millions of wounded soldiers had left the battle-field, whereas many warriors with beautiful physiques had been killed in the battle-field. The poet has detailed the beauty of this scene as if many snakes killed by Garuda were lying around. (1147)

That warrior holding his sword in hand, then fought against the Yadvas and destroyed the army by killing them. The poet Ram has stated that the king roared loudly, and hearing his war-cry many warriors were terrified. The enemy was being praised just as a lion behaves with superiority in a herd of deer. Holding his sword, he killed many of the enemy troops and millions of kings were also killed. Fifty thousand horse riders had been killed, and many charioteers were reduced to chariotless by cutting their chariots into pieces. At places horses were lying dead, while at other places the crowns of kings were lying, or at places elephants were lying dead, alongwith many kings lying around dead. The chariot of king was not resting at any one place, as if a magician was jumping around (1149).

There was a great warrior of Krishna called Ajaib Khan, with whom the king got engaged in a fight. That sturdy warrior did not run away, which made Arang Singh very angry and furious. So he attacked him with his sword, and cut off his head, but his trunk fought for quite some time and then fell down on the ground just as a huge tree gets broken and fallen on ground with a storm. (1150).

Seeing the fate of Ajaib Khan, another person called Ghairat Khan became furious with rage. He made his chariot race forward towards the battle field, and came face to face with Arung Singh without having any fear. Both of them were holding swords in their hands in the battle field and were fighting furiously. The poet has praised the scene as if a drunken elephant had got engrossed in a fight-against another elephant in the forest. (1151)

Ghairat Khan then took up his spear and threw it at the enemy warrior. The warrior, seeing the spear coming, took up his sword and cutting it into two pieces, threw it on the ground. Without being injured, the enemy got enraged and threw another spear on the first enemy. The poet has described the beauty of this scene as if an aerial fire work was passing through the sky. (1152)

The mighty king, seeing the second spear coming towards him, cut it into two pieces thus throwing in on the ground. Then the king, becoming furious with rage, threw his spear towards Ghairat Khan, which struck him on the face and blood started oozing out. The beauty of the scene has been described by the poet as if the fire of wrathfulnèss had become uncontrollable and after burning the heart, had come out. (1153)

"Who could field, whatever he had thought of in his mind, he had killed all the warriors by picking out one by one. I know that out of his fear no one was armed with his bow. So all of you may go back to your homes, as your courage has deserted you, as I have seen now." (1155)

When Sri Krishna had addressed them with such words, then all of them, being enraged, took up their bows and arrows and all of them, collectively moved forward in the battle-field, and all of them picked up courage and prowess in their hearts. From all sides one could hear the shouts of killing the enemy. They had killed all those enemy troops, who dared to oppose them. From both sides, a great and ferocious battle had taken place there, which was witnessed by the king, standing close by. (1156)

Another warrior called Sujan, holding his sword in hand, came forward by supporting his horse. At the outset he had killed fifty horses and then challenging Arung Singh he stood before him. He rushed towards him and attacked him, but the king saved himself from his onslaught by holding his shield in the left hand, and with his right hand wielding his sword, he cut off his head. (1157)

When Arung Singh had killed the warrior named Sujan at the place, then watching this scene, the Yadava army launched an attack against the enemy. (1158)

Swaiyya'

With great desperation and full of wrath the warriors attacked the enemy without having any fear at heart, and stood firmly in their position. They were all furious with rage, and were covered with coats of iron (protective cover) and were saying that they would soon kill him now. So they attacked him armed with swords, lances, maces, sabres and spears, etc shouting and challenging the enemy. The poet Siam has stated that innumerable warriors, beyond any count had held their bows fixed with good arrows. (1159)

The mighty Arung Singh was holding his bow and arrows, and he was filled with wrathfulness and was staring with his eyes (all around). He was shouting for killing the enemy and attacked the enemyy, by shooting arrows at the chests of the enemy troops. Many were killed while many others were wounded while some got afraid of the battle while many of then fled away from the battle field. Many warriors filled with their ego and prestige, got engaged in taking part in the battle and were furious with rage. (1160)

Satak, Balram and Basudev etc., geting into their chariots, got ready to attack. Barmakirat, Udhav and Akroor, filled with fury and ego, moved towards the battle field. Encircled by them, the king (Arung Singh) was looking gorgeous and all the warriors watching him, were appreciating his courage. The poet has praised the scene, as if in the monsoon clouds the sun was appearing in its glory. (1161)

Balram, taking up his hoe killed all the four horses of the enemy. Basudev holding his bow and arrows, had cut off the wheels of the beautiful chariot, and Satak had beheadded the charioteer. While Udhav shot many arrows with furious rage. The king Arung Singh jumped away from the chariot and killed many warriors holding his sword and shield. (1162)

One warrior of Sri Krishna was standing by and he was noticed by the eyes of Arung Singh. With a swift movement of his feet, he wielded his sword at the enemy's head. When Arung Singh attaked with great courage and with a sudden blow cut off his head. The poet has described the beauty of this scene like this. It appeared as if Rahu (demon) had killed the moon and thrown it down from the skies to the Earth. (1163)

He jumped onto the chariot of the enemy and cut off the head of the charioteer at the same time. The enemy had weapons like bow and arrow, sword, mace, and spear etc. in his hand. The poet siam has stated that he himself guided the chariot into the Yadava army and killed some of them, some ran away while some others stood firmly in position,.who were not afraid of him or deterred. (1164)

He himself was driving the chariot and he himself was shooting arrows in a stream (like a net) and protects himself from the enemy onslaughts, and he himself inflicts injuries to the enemy. He had cut off the bows of some with his arrows, while some had lost their chariots, being cut and thrown on the ground. He was wielding his sword just as lightning flashes across the clouds. (1165)

He had killed many warriors in the battle field and with rage, he minces hia lips with the teeth. If any enemy tries to oppose him, he cuts him into pieces with his arrows. Then he attacks the enemy forces himself and then crushes it with force. He was waging a war, without having any fear of Krishna and then directs his chariot with obstinacy towards Balram. (1166)

He then cut off Anagh Singh into two pieces, who fell down from the chariot on to the ground. Only Achal Singh, managed to oppose after facing the arrows, but did not run away. (1171)

Achal Singh then getting enraged addressed Krishna like this. Have you killed all the warriors starting from Ran Singh, and killed Gaj Singh also and then killed Arung Singh by deceit, thus throwing him down? Do you know that by killing mighty Amit Singh and Dhan Singh you call yourself brave? It is only upto the time that the elephant trumpets in the jungle, so long the lion does not appear on the scene. Having said these words to Krishna and filled with ego and pride, he took up his bow and arrows and stretching the bow to his ears, he shot an arrow at Krishna with great force, which struck Krishna in the chest, as Krishna did not see the arrow coming towards him. He said with mace in hand, some curt words. It appeared as if a person with a stick in hand, challenges a lion passing by. (1174)

On hearing these words of the enemy, Sri Krishna then diverted his chatiot, getting furious with rage. A yellow coloured pendant was fluttering (a big flag) on the chariot as lightning shines midst a stream of arrows at him like the rain drops and killed the enemy troops. Then, getting furious with rage, Achal Singh, taking up his bow and arrow came and stood face to face with Sri Krishna. (1175)

Achal Singh spoke thus -

Swaiyya'

All those people who will be left alive in the world, would hear the story of my great battle against you. The poet Ram will please the kings by describing the beauty of this battle. The kings, on hearing this episode, from the pandits, would bestow lot of wealth, being pleased at their narration. O Krishna! The musicians of Shiva would sing the praises of this battle during all the four ages. (1177)

On hearing all the talk of the enemy, Sri Krishna became furious and replied, "The sparrow makes noise (chirps) in the jungle till the hawk swoops on her with vengeance; O fool! You are feeling so proud in the battle field; when I will cut off your head, then only you will realize (my power). So you try to fight with me without any reservation." Sri Krishna added, "What is the delay now?" (1178)

On hearing such curt words Achal Singh got furious with rage (and said), "O Krishna! Why are you talking Shamelessly? Now, keep standing in the battle field and do not run away from the field." When he gave such a reply to Sri Krishna, then he was filled with great inspiration and took up his weapons. He was pleased with himself (within) and stretched his bow and let loose a rain of arrows but none of them struck Sri Krishna. (1179)

Whichever arrow was shot by Achal Singh, was being cut into pieces and thrown on the ground. He knew that none of the arrows had hit the body of Sri Krishna, so he shot many more arrows with greater fury. Krishna had cut all these arrows in the middle of their path and struck an arrow in the enemy's chest. The poet Ram has stated that even Indra, on seeing this wonderful drama, was singing the praises of Sri Krishna (in heavens). (1180)

Sri Krishna then told his charioteer to speed up, and he pulled up his sword in hand. The sword was shining like the splash of lightning from the clouds, and then wielding his sword, he struck it with such a force on the enemy, so that the headless trunk was left. The beauty of this scene has been expressed by the poet like this. It appeared as if a mighty lion had, with full force and might, killed a tiger and thrown him on the ground. (1181)

Couplet

The eight mighty kings, great charioteers and warriors with great perseverance like Adar Singh, Ajab Singh, Aghat Singh, Bir Singh, Amar Singh, Atal Singh, Arjan Singh and Amit Singh saw Krishna in person with their own eyes, so the eight kings got together and exchanged their views amongst themselves. (1182-83)

"O King! Do you see the mighty Krishna? So let us attack him with our full combined force in a sudden move and perform our duty towards our king-emperor, without being awed or frightened of Balram and Krishna at all. Let us position ourselves in the battlefied with all our weapons including bows and arrows, swords, maces, axes, and sharp spears. All took an oath that they would kill Krishna and fight jointly in the battle." (1184)

All the kings, armed with weapons then rushed towards Sri Krishna and attacked him. They positioned themselves by racing their chariots alongwith their four-unswearing warriors. The poet Ram has stated that they were standing in the great battlefield, without any fear of Krishna, the destroyer of all sinful actions. It appeared as if the clouds of doomsday were moving around, with the intent of complete destruction. (1185)

Dhan Singh came with two-pronged force and Anag Singh came with his three-pronged army. Then the kings said, "O Krishna! You had killed the ten kings, with guile and deceit, in the battle field. But we have now come with our four-pronged force in greater wrathfulness, so better listen to our advice, and run away to your home from the battle-field (if you want your safety). (1186)

Then Kahna replied :

Swaiyya'

After listening to their tall talk, Sri Krishna became furious with rage then. Both the brothers, with weapons of bows and arrows and maces etc would destroy the whole enemy force. We will not run away from warriors like the sun and Shiva and would kill you all, or face death in fighting. We would never retrace our steps even if sumer mountain gets shaken or the oceans were to go dry (or things happen which were unimaginable) and never flee from the battle-field. (1187)

After giving this talk, Sri Krishna shot one arrow at the enemy, by stretching his bow, which struck Ajab Singh in the waist, but he did not feel any pain with this strike. Then becoming furious with rage, the obstinate enemy replied like this. "What should we say about the Pandit from whom you had learnt this art of archery (as it is useless)? (1188)

From one side to the other end, the enemy forces were (opposing) advancing. The poet Ram has stated that they were furious with rage and were shouting "Kill them, Kill them" with the strikes of the arrows, swords or maces many warriors had been killed in fighting. The gods were also pleased to watch them fighting and were showering wreaths of flowers from the heavens. (1189)

On this side the warriors were waging war with great fury, while in the heavens Brahma and Sandakik (his sons) were watching with interest. They were telling each other that never before a battle like this had been fought. The warriors had been killed fighting, their blood was flowing while the evil spirits were sucking the blood and enjoying its thrill. the musicians of Shiva had woven wreaths of the skulls and were all praise for the great battle going on (down below). (1190)

All the warriors, armed with weapons, and getting furious with rage, were standing fast, fighting in the battle field. Some were fighting like great wrestlers, using many tactics, while some others had run away seeing such a bitter fighting. Some were terrified and (uttering Ram, Ram) remembering God, while the others were shouting to kill the enemy. Some had fought and died fighting, some others were wounded badly, and were saying, "Where was Krishna?" (1191)

Some warriors were fighting with fists while some others were holding the hairs of each others in their hands. Some others were running away while some were proceeding forward in the battlefield. Some others were fighting with the belts in hand while some others were striking with their daggers and killing each other. The poet siam has stated that only those soldiers were engaged in fighting, who had the prestige and honour of their ancestors at heart. (1192)

All the eight kings, alongwith their armies then lauched an attack on Sri Krishna. The poet Ram has stated, they said "O Krishna! Come and fight with us without having any fear. They were talking like this. Then the kings, taking their bows in hand and stretching them fully, they shot some arrows on Krishna, but Krishna took up his bow and cut these arrows by shooting his arrows, throwing them on the ground. (1193)

Then the enemy forces surrounded Sri Krishna with great fury and wrathfulness from all the four sides. All the warriors then got together and decided to kill the mighty warrior, Krishna, as he had killed the mighty Dhan Singh, Achal Singh and other kings. Saying these words, they started shooting arrows at him, as if the flock of elephants had encircled the lion. (1194)

When they had surrounded Sri Krishna, then Sri Krishna took up his weapons and making a round with great wrathfulness in the battle field, he killed many warriors. Some had their heads cut off while some others were caught by their hair and thrown on the ground, while some others were frightened to death by seeing him. (1195)

The eight kings then spoke to them, "O Brave Men! Why are you running away? So long we are seen alive in the battle-field, you need not be afraid of Krishna. This is our order that you should go face to fare with Krishna and engage him in fighting. No one should retrace himself in fighting. No one should retreat from the battle field. Either you should die fighting or you should stand firm by launching an attack. (1196)

Taking their weapons, the warriors again came back to the battle field and encircled Sri Krishna in the battle field. They did not falter at all and were furious with rage and fighting bravely, they presented a wonderful scene in the battle field. Some mighty warriors, holding their swords and maces, destroyed many of the enemy troops. Some warriors had got their hands or heads mutilated, and some had their chests strewn open. (1197)

Sri Krishna, with his bow in hand, had many charioteers thrown on the ground with their heads cut off. Then some of them, holding their weapons, furious with rage, attacked Krishna suddenly. Sri Krishna taking his sword in hand killed all those who were not trying to flee, alongwith many other warriors. Thus the enemy fled away from Sri Krishna and none could dare to continue fighting in the battle field. (1198)

As he was talking like this, Sri Krishna stretched his bow, and shot an arrow at the enemy's face, which killed him and he lay dead on the ground. (1208)

Then Arjan Singh, being stubborn, spoke like this. "I am a great warrior and I will destroy you to-day itself." (1209)

On hearing his words, Sri Krishna drew his sword and struck it on the enemy's head. He fell down on the ground just as a big tree, due to a storm, falls on to the ground, being withered. (1210)

When Arjna Singh was killed with the sword at the same time Amar Singh was also killed. Then seeing, Atal Singh coming forward with great fury, Sri Krishna took up all his weapons squarely. When he came forward shouting "Kill him kill him," in front of Sri Krishna, he was decorated with ornaments of gold on the body, before its beauty even the sun was feeling belittled. (1211)

What will you gain by fighting against me? "O Krishna! I am telling you the truth, in case you have thought of something else in your mind, then forget about it. On seeing Sri Krishna coming towards him, the mighty Amit Singh became furious with rage. He wounded all the four horses of Krishna's chariot, and then shot an arrow at the chest of the charioteer. Then he shot an arrow at the body of Krishna which was visible to him with great fury. The poet siam has stated that Amit Singh shot the arrow at Krishna's body. (1219)

Then Amit Singh shot many arrows at Sri Krishna and then struck another pointed arrow. With the strike of the arrow Krishna fell down in his chariot, and the charioteer leaving the battle field, rushed (took) his chariot away at that time. On seeing Krishna fleeing, the king asked his army to launch an attack on him. It appeared as if the drunken elephant on seeing a grand tank, had come to destroy the lotus petal. (1220)

On perceiving the enemy advancing, Balram rushed his chariot towards him and stood in front of him. Taking his bow in hand, he struck an arrow on the enemy. Amit Singh saw the on coming arrows and cut them off with his arrows, and launched an attack on Balram with increased fury. (1221)

The poet Ram has stated that Amit Singh said like this. "O Balram! Where are you running away? Having said like this he flashed his sword like the lightning and challenged the Yadava army. (1222)

Any warrior who dared to come in front of him, was killed and thrown on the ground. Stretching his bow up to the ears, he shot many arrows on the enemy. Only those soldiers were saved, who managed to flee and save their lives. What to talk of others, even the most powerful warrior could not go alive. (1223)

Balram took up another set of weapons (pestle) and rode on a chariot, thus coming on to the battle field again. Straightaway Balram engaged the king in the four pronged attack. All these soldiers, who were left alive, seeing this sort of killing, fled away from the battlefield. The poet siam has stated that no one could face Amit Singh's onslaughts in the battle field. The most powerful men who used to call themselves brave and had fought wearing various arms many a time in the battle field ran away from there just as a gust of wind flies away from the leaves of a tree. (1235)

Many of the Yadava troops were still standing fast in the the battle field while many others had run away from there and then going to Krishna, cried like this. Many warriors, who are countless, had been killed by the mighty king Amit Singh. The horses were lying dead, while elephants had fallen and the chariots, being cut off, were lying in the field. "O Lord-Sustainer and Killer! What is in your mind, having seen the destruction of your army?" (1236)

The warriors, who came to Sri Krishna, were distressed and said, (requested him), then Krishna replied to them like this. (1237)

This king, had worshipped the Lord, standing in the ocean waters for many months and had meditated on the Lord, doing penance, and then forsaking his mother, father and brother had gone to the forests for meditation, taking exile. Being pleased with his worship, "Shiva had asked him to seek his blessings and demand any benediction from him. as he wanted to give him a great gift (benediction)." Then the king had asked Shiva for this blessing that in the battle field no enemy should be able to withstand his onslaughts. (1238)

"Moreover you will not get killed by anybody including Sheshnag, Indra, Ganesh, the moon and the sun. Thus having been blessed like this by Shiva, he had killed many warrior kings in the battle field. Then Krishna told his troops that he had decided in his mind to ask him how he wished to be killed. Kabit

When the day dawned, the darkness was gone, the warriors became furious with rage and getting themselves armed, moved on their chariots. On the other side Krishna had sent for Baldev and feeling greatly at ease in heart and took many Yadava warriors alongwith him. In the meantime from the opposite side, without any fear, and taking up their weapons, the unrelenting warriors came challenging and yelling by racing their chariots and with beating of drums both the forces met each other mingling with them. (1267)

Couplet

The source of great light Sri Krishna and Amit were seated on the chariots with great honour, who was taken for the moon by the (stack) roots of lotus and the lotus took him for the sun. (1268)

Swaiyya'

The peacocks, seeing the dark coloured complexion of Sri Krishna, chatricks mistook him for the clouds and started dancing in the jungle, while the partridges (chatricks) mistook him for the moon. The women took him for the god of love (Kamdev) in their hearts, while the saintly persons saw him as the Lord himself. The ascetics and Yogis had considered him as the Shiva while the suffering humanity took him for a great vaid (physician). The children had seen him as a child among them, whereas the despots saw in him the god of death (Yamraj). (1269)

The deer were running towards him, listening to the drum music (special), and those persons, without any dual-mindedness, have thought him to be the life-giver. Amongst his friends, he is considered as the greatest friend, while the enemy has seen in him the god of death. (1270)

Seeing them coming, Sri Krishna told Balram to deal witht them as he liked. So mighty Balram, taking his hoe in hand, cut off their five heads and threw them down. (1272)

Getting furious with rage, the strong (two pronged) army alongwith their kings were killed. The remaining few warriors, who were still alive went away from the battle-field. (1273)

Now the episode of the twelve kings alongwith their battle begins.

Swaiyya'

The twelve kings, seeing the plight of these five kings, became furious while grinding their teeth. They were all armed with great weapons and protective iron covers, and then they distributed many weapons to the troops. They consulted each other and decided as their chests were burning in the fire of revenge. They were saying that whosoever dies fighting, goes to heavens, leading a successful life. It is worth living to lead a life of few hours with honour. (1274)

They stood firmly on the battle-field with such thoughts in mind and with huge army with them, they challenged Sri Krishna saying, "O Krishna! Your brother had killed the five kings earlier now come forward for the battle; or laying down your arms, you may retreat to your home. If you are strong enough, then come along and fight against us for sometime; and watch our strength. (1275)

On having ideas at heart, they came with a huge army and challenged Krishna alongwith their weapons. As they approached the battle front, the head of Sahib Singh was cut off and he killed Sada Singh also, throwing his dead body on the ground. Sunder Singh was cut into pieces and thrown down, then fighting with Sajan Singh, he was also killed in the battle. Sabal Singh was caught hold from his hair and splashed on the ground, this is how Krishna was fighting in the battle. (1276)

Couplet

Then Sakat Singh was killed and then Ram Singh was killed in the battle. After killing Saphal Singh and Aur Singh Krishna sounded the song of victory. (1277)

Savachh Singh then said -
Swaiyya'

In the battle field Savachh Singh was furious due to his might, so he told Krishna, "You have killed just now ten kings, who were great warriors, without having any fear in your mind. That moment Krishna shot many arrows in a continuous shower, just as rain pours from monsoon (Savan) clouds. But that Sawachh Singh, in spite of the storm of arrows being shot, did not deter from his position, and was standing steady in his position like a mountain in the battle field. (1278)

He fought most fiercely against Yadava warriors just as Jambh had fought against Indra once. The king was staying put in his post just as a flag post is erected in the battle front. (1279)

Swaiyya'

Just as Sumer mountain cannot be shaken off from its position, however hard one may try to shift it with hands or just as pole star (Dhruv Star) never shifts from its position or Shiva remains stead-fast in his adamant posture. Just as the great chaste (virtuous) sati does not falter from her religious (moral) duty, or the Yogis get fixed in meditation posture, without any deflection, in the same manner the obstinate king Savachh Singh remained steadfast in his position. (1280)

Kabit

The poet siam has stated that field Savachh Singh, being furuious with rage, had killed many enemy warriors in the battle field. Infact he had killed almost one hundred ordinary charioteers, two hundred mighty chatioteers and one thousand elephants of Krishna's army. He had killed many horses also in the battlefield along with infantry troops. The ground was red with blood shed with waves of running blood streams. The wounded soldiers were lying on the ground, as if some drug addicts were lying asleep, being completely intoxicated or with a red coloured sheet the Roomi people were sleeping there. (1281)

On hearing the enemy's remarks, Sri Krishna laughed and said, "O Swachh Singh! I will kill you like a lion kills a jackal. (1284)

Just as a lion, seeing a tiger, looks at him with great fury and waits for a chance or just as a lion, seeing a great elephant in the forest, gets into a rage or a leopard leaps (rushes) at seeing a deer; in the same manner, Krishna attacked Swachh Singh. The charioteer of Krishna made his chariot move at a rush (so fast) just as the wind makes a fire to rage with more fury. (1285)

From one side Swachh Singh came forward while from this side Balram advanced with great fury. Both were fighting with bows and arrows, swords and other weapons in hand and fought a fierce battle. They were staying put in their positions by shouting "Kill him, kill him", and they never left the battle field (in panic) but were fighting with perseverance. Swachh Singh was neither afraid of Krishna nor Balram or other Yadava troops and the mighty warrior continued to fight vigorously. (1286)

Couplet

When both had fought for quite sometime, you know what Krishna did. With a single stroke of the sword, he cut off the head of the enemy. (1287)

When Swachh Singh got killed, then Amer Singh became furious with rage. He never got frightened on seeing the battle progress, but stood there firmly in his position (with his feet dug in there). (1288)

Swaiyya'

When the mighty warrior Samar Singh, becoming furious with rage, and holding his sword in hand, had killed many warriors of Sri Krishna and many had fallen, being wounded, while many warriors had run away from the battle field being defeated. They went upto Sri Krishna and told him that they had been defeated by Samar singh. Samar Singh's sword moves like the saw moves at Kasi (Benaras). He had sawed the warriors into two pieces by chopping them into two. (1289)

Swaiyya'

Krishna's warrior Abhav Singh got enraged and launched an attack on the enemy warriors. Sangar Singh was very obstinate and had stood fast against the enemy and attacked violently. Then Sangar Singh took out his large sword and cut away Abhav Singh's head. His head less body was lying on the ground as if the lightning had fallen there causing an earthquake. (1293)

Kabit

Raja Anrudh Singh was standing close by Krishna; and he had called him. Firstly he gave him respect and then Krishna ordered him to go and fight in the battle. So he raced and went there. Arrows and Swords were used in the battle and daggers or bayonets were further used. For about eight hours the fighting continued very furiously. Just as the lion chases a deer, or the hawk kills the sparrows, similarly Krishna warriors had been killed by Samar Singh. (1294)

The poet Siam says that Krishna had killed the warriors (enemy) in no time just as a poet feels pained in the meeting hearing the poetry of a naive poet and does not agree with his thoughts or just as a lion destroys the elephant in water or fire or just as a crude Raja or womy destroys a human being or greed destroys good qualities or the darkness disappears on the dawn of day as the sun rises. (1295)

Kabit

Birbhadar Singh, Baldev Singh, Bir Singh and Bal Singh became furious with rage and came face to face with the enemy. Where Samar Singh was standing in the battle field they saw him, and became red with rage. They were all expert in the art of fighting and they took up their weapons and all the warriors of Krishna rushed forward from all sides. That moment the mighty Samar Singh stretched his bow and struck his arrows, which killed all the four warriors of Krishna in no time. (1296)

Then Kahna said

Swaiyya'

When all the four warriors were killed, then Krishna addressed his warriors like this. Who is such a warrior in our army to take up cudgels against this man and fight against him? Whosoever is a mighty warrior, should rush towards him and attack the enemy, thus waging a war without having any fear. Krishna addressed loudly all of his men with the war cry saying, "Is there anyone amongst you who could take away the enemy's life? (1297)

There was a demon in Krishna's army who started marching towards the enemy. He was called by the (world) "Koor Dhuja", he went and told the enemy like this. "O Samar Singh! You better get ready, now I am going to kill you." He took up his bow and arrow after saying this and shot an arrow at Samar Singh which struck him thus killing him on the spot, as if he were dead since many days. (1298)

Koor Dhuja had killled Samar Singh in the battle field while Sakat Singh was getting ready to kill him (by digging his feet). (1299)

Koor Dhuja was seen like a mountain in the battle-field front. The poet Ram has stated that he wanted to kill the enemy, so he said, "O Sakat Singh! I shall kill you, just as I have killed Samar Singh, so why are you trying to fight against me? Saying this he took up his mace like a big tree, and took up his sword alongwith other weapons. Then the demon addressed him like this. O Raja (Sakat Singh)! Look, there is hardly, any time left in your life's span (you will lose your life in a moment). (1300)

When the brother of Koor Dhuja Kak Dhuja saw his brother being killed, he got enraged and attacked with fury. He lengthened his teeth for many miles and transformed himself into a mountain, having hair like trees and armed with his weapons came to the battle field. But Sakat Singh, taking one arrow, stretched his bow and with one arrow killed him and threw him down. (1308)

Then one demon army commander was standing nearby, who suddenly attacked the King (Sakat Singh). Taking his force of demons he became furious with rage and sharpening many arrows he proceeded for attack, and he was called by the name 'Karup'. He rushed forward to kill the enemy and he launched a fierce attack just as in the month of Savan (July) the clouds gather together in a cluster. (1309)

By perceiving a huge army of the enemy, the mighty Sakat Singh also become furious with rage. He took up his bow and arrows in hand having surveyed the whole situation in the battle front he came in front of the enemy force, ridding himself of all fear and other doubts. It seemed as if the mighty Sakat Singh had appeared as a storm (wind) to disperse the clouds of the force of demons. (1310)

Kuroop demon disappeared and from the sky he spoke like this, "Where will you run away from my strike?" Then he threw many elephants and horses from the skies. Then many trees, stones, rocks, chariots, hillocks, bears and large size black snakes were hurled from the skies to the battle front, which killed everyone else except the king (Sakat Singh. (1311)

Whatever mountain like rocks were thrown on Sakat Singh by the demon, were cut into pieces by his arrows. Sakat Singh then marched towards the side where the demon was standing (Rajnichar). That mighty warrior had wounded many of the enemy troops by wielding his sword and killed some of them. The demon force had no control over him (Sakat Singh) and all were defeated by him due to their guile and deceit. (1312)

Then Sakat Singh took up his bow and arrow in his hands and shot many arrows at Karup Singhs body with fury and the demons, who were still alive, all attacked Sakat Singh with all their weapons inhand raising a war cry. All those, who came to fight with him, were done to death, while some fought with great grit and were wounded badly. The poet has described the beauty of the scene as in the spring season (Basant), the trees of saffron had become red in colour. (1313)

When the mighty Sakat Singh had killed Bikratanin then his brother, Kurup could not bear this loss. (1319)

Swaiyya'

On seeing the death of Bikratanin, Kurup the messenger of the god of death (kal) descended from the skies and engaged him (Sakat Singh) in a fierce battle, being armed with bow, arrows, sword and mace etc. Then Sri Sakat Singh, taking his big bow, stretched an arrow in it, and the pointed arrow was shot at the enemy's head. His head was cut off and fell on the ground, while the trunk rushed for continuing the battle. (1320)

Then what is the value of all other gods, Shiva's musicians (pisach) and other gods and demons, (as compared to him)? Sri Krishna then told all his warriors that none of the gods even had the same power as Sakat Singh had. (1330)

Then Sri Krishna said that

Swaiyya

You go and fight in the battle field on one side and on the other side I will worship Bhawani by meditating on Lord's Name. Krishna said that he will start on this worship right now. On one side Yadav warriors were sent to the battle field for waging war, while on this side Krishna, seated on the ground, started worship of the goddess, leaving all activities of his own thinking, and started meditating on the goddess alone, with full concentration. Then Chandi appeared in person and asked Krishna to seek any boon from her, which he had already thought of. Krishna asked for the same favour of killing the enemy in the battle-field which was granted to him. (1332)

Having gained this benediction (favour) and being fully satisfied in mind, Krishna rode on his chariot. The poet Siam has stated that Krishna, having worshipped Bhawani, gained the blessing of killing the enemy. Then Sri Krishna, armed with various weapons, went to face the mighty warrior. It appeared as if the victory germination had been grown with this favour (blessing) of the goddess. (1333)

Krishna appeared himself at the same place, where the warrior Sakat Singh was standing and fighting in the battle-field and said, O Sakat Singh! Where are you running away to? Remain standing there as I have approached you here with all my might. Then with great fury, Sri Krishna took up his mace in the hand, and struck it on the enemy's head. He gave up his life (Sakat Singh) and worshipped Chandi in his heart, as a result his body (Sakat's) was also sent to Chandi's presence. (1335)

When the body of Sakat Singh reached the presence of Chandi, he gave up life. All gods including the Sun, Indra, Sankadik jointly sang the praises of Sakat Singh. There was no battle, fought like this, previously, and we had not seen such a battle in our life time. Sri Sakat Singh was a great warrior, deserving all our praises as he had gone to heavens having fought against Krishna. (1336)

Then Ugar Singh took out an arrow and reciting a magic spell on it, shot it towards Subhat Singh, which struck him in the chest, and piercing his body with force, came out from the otherside. Thus with the striking of his arrow Subhat Singh fell down dead on the ground. The beauty of this scene has been praised by the poet Siam like this. Manoj Singh was killed immediately by the striking of the spear, which was taken by the Yama to the heavens. Then after killing him, the warrior then challenged Balram with great force taking his bow and arrow. (1349)

On seeing the upcoming enemy, Balram became furious with rage, and taking his pestle advanced towards him. The poet Siam has stated that both the warriors faced each other with great strength and a fierce battle ensued. Finally the pestle of Balram struck the head of Ugar Singh, as he did not know the art of saving himself from its strike. As such Ugar Singh fell down dead on the ground then Balram sounded (blew) his conch shell of victory. (1350)

Now episode of the battle of Karam Singh etc. and the five kings begins.

Then Karam Singh, Jai Singh and other warriors came to the battle-field, when Jalap Singh and Gaja Singh were very furious with rage. These five kings, including Jagat Singh, were very beautiful and powerful. They fought a bloody battle and had killed many Yadava warriors. Karam Singh and Jalap Singh launched a surprise attack, alongwith Gaja Singh and Jai Singh, while Jagat Singh was feeling very proud of his power, so the god of death had directed him towards the battle-field. (1360)

Couplet

All the four warriors including Karam Singh, Jalpa Singh, Gaja Singh and Jai Singh were killed by Kritas Singh. (1361)

Swaiyya'

Kritas Singh had killed four kings from Krishna's side in the battle field, and many other great warriors and archers had been killed and many had been sent to heavens (killed) by Sri Krishna. Then Jagat Singh, a great warrior, taking up his bow and arrows went to the battle field for waging war and seeing some other warriors in the battle field, he let loose a rain (stream) of arrows like a shower. (1362)

The army had been destroyed by all these killings and then he was holding his sword in hand. Then he rushed towards the battle front and came face to face with Jagat Singh and then he attacked Jagat Singh with his hand, as a result he was split ino two pieces and he fell down from his chariot onto the ground. The poet has described the beauty of this scene like this. It appears as if lightning had struck some seal trees on the mountain, which were cut into two pieces, thus throwing them down. (1363)

Then Kathin Singh, a warrior from Krishna's army, attacked in such a fashion, just as a drunken elephant attacks a lion with great fury. (1364)

Swaiyya'

On seeing the enemy coming, he shot an arrow, which killed the enemy in no time, and the whole army, accompanying him was also destroyed in less than six hours. After killing many warriors of Sri Krishna's he looked at Kahna with great ruthfulness and addressed him like this. "O Krishna! Come and fight with me without any fear; What are you waiting for in the ground?" (1365)

Then Sri Krishna, getting enraged, raced his chariot towards him at that very moment, through the charioteer. Then Sri Krishna held his sword in the hand and wielded it at that proud warrior, and Kritasar Singh, taking his shield inhand saved himself from the onslaught. Then taking out his own sword, he wounded the body of the charioteer (of Krishna). (1366)

Both were engaged in heavy fighting by wielding their swords, then Krishna managed to inflict a wound on the enemy, but the enemy also wounded (with his sword) Sri Krishna immediately. Both the forces, seeing this drama got bewildered, when from the heavens, the gods spoke like this. "O Krishna! Listen. You have taken too long, specially when you could kill demons like Mur and Madh in no time (previously). (1367)

For four hours, the battle was raging, and Krishna thought of a design, keeping the prevailing situation in mind. "Do not kill him!" Krishna looking at his back, said this. So Kritsatar, thinking it, to be correct, looked towards his back. Then suddenly Krishna wielding his sharp sword struck it at the enemy's head, thus he managed to kill the enemy and relieved his army of this dreaded enemy's fear. (1368)

Thus, having killed the enemy, Sri Krishna felt very happy at heart. Then looking towards his army, Sri Krishna sounded his conch shell (of victory). Sri Krishna is the friend and helper of the saints and is called omni-potent. Then Sri Krishna addressed his multi-coloured army like this. Let us fight it out in the battle field (and finish the war). (1369)

The warriors shouts of "Killing the enemy" was like the song of the dancing party. (1387)

The arrows were striking the enemy heads with a striking noise, like the sounds of tinkling bells. The warriors falling down in the battle field while fighting were like giving their lives in alms. The jugglers were dancing or the warriors were fighting with fury. It was not clear whether it was a battle field or an arena of dancing. (1388)

The poet Siam has stated that all the above mentioned ten kings attacked Khar'ag Singh, being furious with rage. They shot many arrows, taking them out of quiver, with their bows, with great strength at the very outset. They had killed two hundred horses, one hundred elephants and three hundred warriors. They had also killed twenty charioteers and thirty greatest charioteers, thus sending them to hell. (1395)

Then Kha'rag Singh, launching another attack, killed one hundred horses, and ten thousand infantry soliders alongwith another fifty great charioteers. The poet Siam has stated that all this happened in a short spell. The most of the army of the ten kings had fled away just as the deer run away at the sight of a lion. In the battle field Kharag Singh was standing like an adament warrior with great fury. (1396)

Kabit

The poet Siam has stated that Kha'rag Singh, stretching his strong bow upto his ears, he killed with ten arrows each, powerful elephants and all the ten kings in turn. (1397)

Some of the troops, accompanying Krishna's warriors had been killed by the enemy, then Kha'rag Singh, with sword in hand, in the battle field had become furious with rage. Being revengeful he had killed some of the troops, so the army strength had reduced. On seeing this situation the poet had thought in mind that the sunrise on the doomsday had dried up the ocean of all its waters. (1405)

Firts he cut off their arms and then their heads. The poet Siam has stated that the chariots alongwith their horses and charioteers, had been destroyed in the battle field. All those, whose days were numbered, their corpuses were being eaten away by voltures and jackals. Even those warriors, who had killed many foes earlier, had been divested of their lives in the battle. (1406)

The poet Siam has stated that Kha'rag Singh having killed the twelve kings, was standing gracefully in the battle field as if the sun was shining at the day dawn, after expelling darkness all around, the sun was looking graceful in its glory. Kharag Singh warrior, then thundered in the battle field, on hearing its sound, even the dark clouds of Savan (monsoon) felt ashamed (belittled) or at the time of doomsday, the ocean, crossing its beaches, was gurgling loudly. Raja Kharag Singh had, through his prowess, made the forces of Sri Krishna, run away from the battle field and all the warriors, who cared to fight against him, were derived of their lives. The poet Siam has stated that those warriors, who had taken the sword in hand and had rushed towards him for waging war, had been killed finally, having destroyed their lives without any purpose. (1408)

Then Kharag Singh, getting enraged, had killed one thousand elephants, and ten thousand horse riders of the enemy forces. Two hundred chariots had been ripped open and many warriors had been killed with the wielding of a sword (with sharpened sword). Twenty thousand men of infantry had been killed, who were lying scattered in the battle field like fallen trees. It appeared as if Hanuman, being revengeful, had uprooted Ravan's garden from its very roots. (1409)

There was a demon, called Akbar, in Sri Krishna's army, and he suddenly attacked Raja Kharag Singh. He was furious with rage, by taking up his weapons and wielding his sword, like the brilliance of lightning. The poet Siam has sung the praises of this scene as if he had shot the arrows incessantly like a shower, after shouting loudly, as if Indra had launched an attack on the assembly of milkmen, greatly enraged. (1410)

The demon forces had come in large numbers like a cloud but Raja Kharag Singh was not deterred by it a bit even. He was furious with rage, and holding his bow and arrows in a stylish manner. By stretching his bow to the ears, he shot arrows which had pierced the heart of the enemy. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet as if the snake had crept into the hole. (1411)

The poet Ram has stated that after killing the enemy with arrows, he killed many others with his sword. The blood oozing out of the bodies thrown on the ground headless, was spreading all over the place. The beauty of this scene has been described by the poet as if he was not killed by the sword but the Yama's staff (stick) had hit him on the head. (1412)

When the demon was killed, his army launched an attack on him with great fury. The poet Siam has stated that the demon forces, on coming (to the field) with various weapons started fighting fiercely. Many demons were wounded then and many demons had inflicted wounds on Kharag Singh, using various manouvres. Bearing all the onslaughts of the demons, Raja Kharag Singh managed to fight with sword in hand, without even caring for the wounds he had received. (1413)

All the demons, getting furious with rage, attacked the Raja. They were holding in hand arrows, bows, maces and spears, while wielding their swords. All the demons were looking very powerful and their bodies were charred with the fire of their wrathfulness. They were all attacking the body of Raja Kharag Singh just as a goldsmith does while fabricating (making) gold ornaments. (1414)

All the demons, then getting more furious with rage launched a severe attack against him and Raja killed all of them. Then the remaining troops were engaged in fighting with his weapons. Then taking up his bow and arrows he shot arrows cutting off their heads from the body. Bur they never got terrified from the mighty warrior, Raja Kharag Singh and attacked him ruthlessly, but finally the king was successful in killing them (cutting them into pieces). (1415)

There was a big mighty demon, who enraged within his mind and shot arrows at Raja Kharag Singh which pierced his body completely, then the Raja struck the enemy with his javelin (sa'ng) which penetrated into his chest just as lightning hides behind the clouds. Or it appeared as if Sheshnag running for safety from Garuda for fear of his attack, himself in the jungle. (1416)

On the strike of this javelin, he gave up his life and another demon, who happened to be there, was also killed by the Raja with his sword. The poet Ram has stated that Kharag Singh, being furious with rage, took up courage and killed about thirty demons, standing there, instantly. They were fallen on the ground as if Indra had struck with his mace, thus causing the fall of mountains. (1417)

Kabit

The Raja had cut off the arms of many demons and cut off the heads of many enemy troops. Many warriors had fled away from the battle field while many others had been killed, whereas Kharag Singh did not retrace his steps in the field. Raja Kharag Singh was roaming around the enemy forces with his sabres, spears, bows mace and trident that at times he fights advancing forward or geos backwards a step or two. At times he is seen while at time he is not seen (being surrounded by the enemy). (1418)

Kha'rag Singh, getting furious with rage, had killed many demons. It appeared as if they were sleeping in the battle field in a drunken state. Those warriors, who were still alive, had run away out of increased fear, and all came running to Sri Krishna, wailing and crying (like this). (1419)

Kahna then told them -

Then Sri Krishna announced to the whole army, "Who is such a warrior in the whole army, who would dare to fight against him? (Kharag Singh) (1420)

Sortha

Two warriors out of Sri Krishna's army came forward, who were greatly agitated and enraged. They were both great charioteers who could use patience in the battle field, and equally powerful as Indra. (1421)

Swaiyya'

Jha'rajha'r Singh and Jhujhan Singh, alongwith many of their troops, stood face to face and horses made such a noise that the Earth trembled underneath it, and all the seven (under worlds) worlds (Netherlands of Universe) were shaken up. Kharag Singh was standing steady in his position just as Sumer mountain does not bend before the unleashing winds. Infact, none of the warriors could face him effectively, and all the Yadavas had become demoralised before him. (1422)

Taking his bow and arrows and becoming ruthless with rage, Kha'rag Singh had killed many troops of the two kings. Many of the horses, charioteers, and elephants of the two forces had been killed and they were unaccountable as even Brahma had no account of them. The poet Siam has detailed the beauty of the scene as such. It appeared as if it were not a battle field but an arena for showing one's destructive power and fighting spree. (1423)

Kharag Singh, with his bow and arrows, had pierced in the enemy ranks, and he was greatly enraged in his heart. The enemy forces, had been burnt to ashes, with the fire of wrathfulness which was visibly seen all around. He had destroyed the enemy forces in no time. The poet Siam has described the beauty of the scene as if with the sunrise, the enemy in the form of darkness, disappears out of fear. It appeared he were not a warrior but the rising sun in the celestial atmosphere. (1424)

That very moment Jhar'ajhar' Singh, fully enraged and wielding his pointed Sword, attacked Kharag Singh with force, but the Raja (Kharag Singh) using force snatched away his sword from the hand and threw it at the enemy himself. This resulted in the cutting off his head, which then fell down on the ground. The beauty of the scene has been described by the poet as if Shiva, getting furious with rage, had cut off the head of his son (Ganesh) from the body. (1425)

When the great warrior (Jhar'ajha'r Singh) was killed in the battle, then the other warrior, Jhoojhan Singh got fully enraged and racing his chariot, and with a pointed sword in hand, he advanced towards him. Then Kharag Singh, taking his bow and arrows in his hands, snatched the enemy's sword from its very hand (handle) as if the god of death (Yama) was running around with his tongue looking out and losing his tongue, (instead of killing Kha'rag Singh), he was made hopeless to fulfil his desire. (1426)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

When the sword was removed from his hand, then all those fleeing warriors came back, as they had got furious with rage, with their weapons in their hands. They were looking glorious with their arms, and the poet Siam has praised their beauty (power) as if Raja Kha'rag Singh had arranged a Swambar and all these warrior kings had come there to participate in it. All the enemy warrior kings, who came to fight against Kha'rag Singh, had been killed by him with his arrows. Many of them had fought valiantly, while many of them had fled away, out of fear from the battle field, while many were standing there, though frightened out of fear, and the poet has described the beauty of this scene as if the whole jungle was on fire and the drunken elephants had collected together at one place (out of fear). (1428)

With Raja Kharag Singh's fury even to the slightest extent, many of the warriors had been killed in the battle field. Whenever the Raja wielded his sword, many horses, elephants` and chariots were cut into pieces. On seeing this situation, all the enemies got together and pondered over it, just as the deer's planning to kill a lion is fruitless, they were thinking how to kill him (but he was not afraid of them). (1429)

The mighty Raja Kharag Singh again took up his weapons with ruthless fury. The poet Ram has stated that the Raja had killed all those warriors, whom he wanted to kill. The heads of all these warriors were cut off and lying on the ground, which were cut off by Raja Kharag Singh. It appeared as if the enemy heads, were like closed lotus flowers in the ocean of blood. (1430)

Couplet

Then seeing Jhujh Singh in this fashion, Kharag Singh took up his sword with great fury and cut off the enemy's head as if the honour of the sword had been maintained. (1431)

Then Jhujhar Singh, having fought a great battle had attained martyrdom and proceeded to heavens. All the force, accompanying hun was also destroyed by Kharag Singh, with his sword in hand. Those who were still alive, had fled away from the battle field without caring for their military traditions. It appeared that Raja Kharag Singh had wielded his sword like the Yama (god of death) moving with his club in hand (causing death allround). (1432)

Then Satak, Bramakrit, Udhav and Balram with his hoe in hand, moved forward. The other warriors, like Basudev etc. were also given enough troops and strength to join them. Having, thought in mind of finishing Kha'rag Singh's life, all of them showered a volley of arrows on him. It appeared as if Indra's clouds had burst with rainfall in full strength on the Govardhan mountains. (1435)

Having faced the stream (net) of arrows, Kharag Singh also took up his bow and arrows and shot many arrows on the enemy, thus wounding their horses and killing all the charioteers in the battle field. Then ploughing through the infantry forces, killed all of them with his arrows. Then relieving them of their chariots, by cutting them into pieces. Yadavas were rendered chariot-less and forced them to flee. (1436)

"O Balram! Why are you running away from the battle field? You will never get a chance of this type of war again. Kha'rag Singh also had told Satak, "What will be your prestige left by running away like this? If you were to go to another society, then it must be a social order of cowards. So think over again and come along to fight with me, as by running away, with what face will you go back home? (having lost). (1437)

Even on hearing these words, none of the warriors retracted to fight and the Raja pursued the fleeing troops with great fury. The Yadavas were running away like goats and Kha'rag Singh appeared like a lion (chasing them). Then he rushed towards Balram and put his bow around his neck. Then he laughed and let go Balram having subdued him. (1438)

They streched their bows upto the ears and shot many arrows at him, just as during monsoon the rain drops fall through the clouds. Thus Yadavas shot arrows endlessly. (1440)

The king (Kharag Singh) cut off all their arrows (with his arrows) into pieces, and then directed his arrows at the body of Krishna, so the blood was oozing out of Krishna's wounds, and they were not able to hold on against him. There were many other warriors, who got wonder struck by seeing the Raja's fighting ability. None had the courage to face him, and all the warriors including Sri Krishna fled away. (1441)

Sri Krishna, taking up his bow and arrows, passed some remarks with great wrathfulness, "So far with a fearles mind, but I will not allow you to proceed any futher as per your wishes, just as a drunken elephant moves around with arrogance in the jungle till a lion catches hold of him with fury. Why do you want to lose your invaluable life? So better go home safely by surrendering your arms! (1445)

On hearing these words of Sri Krishna, the Raja Kha'rag Singh answered, "Why are you making so much noise in the battle field, as if someone had looted your wealth in the jungle? You are talking like a fool with great stubborness. Have you not fled away from me many times earlier? You are called as "Brij Raj" for nothing since you are spoiling your prestige in society without any shame! (1446)

You are still very young, having a charming personality, with your beard growing on the face. O Krishna! Listen and go home and rest, having a peaceful and enjoyable life. Moreover, you know for certain that after fighting with me in this battle field, you will not go back alive. If you want to live, then run away right now, else you will face death (you will be deptached to heaven) (1448)

After hearing such words of Khara'g Singh, Sri Krishna took up his bow in the hands, and shot an arrow (pointing at the enemy). The Raja was wounded by Sri Krishna, while the Raja also wounded Krishna in turn. The poet Ram has stated that both the warriors fought there many times, with countless arrows being shot from both the sides, which had covered the sky like the clouds. (1449)

The other supports (warriors) of Sri Krishna also shot many arrows, but not a single one struck Raja Kha'rag Singh, rather the Raja had wounded most of them with his arrows, on noticeing them from a distance. In the meantime a great force of Yadavas, racing their chariots and pointing their arrows instantly on him, launched an attack collectively. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja (Kha'rag Singh) then, getting furious with rage, killed most of the infantry troops. (1450)

Many warriors, after waging a valiant war, had fallen down dead on the ground, many were wounded and many of them had fled away whereas many were still engaged in fighting with him. Then Raja Kharag Singh, wielding his sword, cut many of the warriors into pieces. Infact, the Raja's bravery was like a beloved, whom all the lovers were watching with keen eyes. (1451)

The poet Siam has stated that there were many more warriors, whom the Raja had defeated in the battle, being enraged, and many others, socalled experts in the art of warfare, had been destroyed by the Raja, getting furious with rage in no time. The Raja had broken (cut off) their chariots, and had killed with his arrows many elephants and horses of the enemy. In the battle field, the killing spree was in vogue (in play) and those still left alive, had fled away from the battle field. (1452)

After chasing the Yadava troops, the Raja launched an attack on Balram and Krishna. he fought a fierce battle with his weapons including spear, sabre, mace and sword with great fury. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja then again took up his bow and arrows in his hands and like the rain drops falling from the clouds, he filled the tank of Krishna's body with his arrows (he sieved the body of Krishna with arrows). All the warriors (gods) like Indra etc., on the striking of this arrow, came down on the Earth. The poet Ram has stated; they all, taking their guns in hand, aiming at the Raja with great fury, fired the shots. All those weapons were cut into pieces by Raja Kha'rag Singh by taking bows and arrows and those arrows were shot at the bodies of the gods. Perceiving his body wounded and drenched in blood all over, Indra got frightened and then all the gods got together, thus attacking jointly at the Raja. (1455)

The poet Siam has stated that the gods like the sun etc. got very agitated and heated up with wrathfulness. So taking their spears, swords and maces in hand all the kings started fighting with Kha'rag Singh, and all had got together in the battlefield. The beauty of the scene has been described by the poet as if the gods like black bees had gathered together to enjoy the aroma of the flower like arrows of the Raja (Kharag Singh) at one place. (1456)

The gods had encircled the Raja Kha'rag Singh from all four corners by joining together, then the king, taking his bow and arrows in hand showed such a bravery (prowess), which is being detailed here. (1457)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

Kharag Singh pierced through the sun with twelve arrows, and then shot ten arrows at the moon. Then he shot about one hundred arrows at Indra, which pierced through his body, coming out from the other side. The demi-gods, kinar and gandharab (the musicians of Shiva) like gods were all wounded by the Raja with his arrows. Many of them had fled away from the battle field out of sheer fear, while many were still standing fast (there) in the battle field. (1458)

When the fierce battle was raging, then Indra becoming furious, took up a spear in his hand. The poet Siam has stated that Indra then, threw this spear with great force at Raja Kharag Singh. And from the other side the Raja, taking his bow in hand cut it into pieces with his arrows. The beauty of this scene has been described as if the arrow of the Raja was like Garuda and he had swallowed the spear like serpent in his mouth. (1459)

All were pained and fed up with the arrows of the Raja, and all the gods including Indra had fled away. The sun and the moon, getting terrified with fear had run away from the battle field. Having been wounded badly, all of them had fled away, and none was left behind (to fight). All the gods were sorrowful and felt ashamed of themselves and had gone back to their abodes. (1460)

When all the gods had run away, then Raja (Kha'rag Singh) became proud with egiosm, and with his heavy bow in hand, he started shooting arrows at Sri Krishna. (1461)

Then Sri Krishna, being aroused with passion, took up his "Rachhas Weapon," and with magic-spell Mantra, he let go the wonderful arrow. (1462)

Through that arrow, many demons were created (born) who were looking horible, ugly and great warriors. They were armed with all sorts of weapons like wheels, sabres, daggers, swords, shields and maces, spears etc, and they were carrying in hand pestles, mountains and trees without leaves; They all came to the Raja, with their opened teeth, tilted eyes, and were frightening the Raja. (1463)

They had lot of hair on their heads, with clumsy dresses, with long hair on the body and were chewing human bones within the mouth and their teeth were making clattering sound with each other. Their eyes were red with blood. So who could manage to fight with them with strength? They were roaming around throughout the night with their bows stretched alongwith fixed arrows, and were performing sinful actions all the time. (1464)

So from the other side, the demons jointly attacked the Raja. Picking up courage at heart, and becoming furious with rage, the Raja addressed the enemies like this. "I will kill you all in the battle today." Saying this he took up his bow and arrows, and attacked the army of demons with patience and obstinacy. (1465)

The great warrior then shot many arrows at the enemy by streching his bow. Some of them lost their arms, while some others were hit with the arrows in the chests. Some had fallen down, being wounded. On seeing them, the weakling (cowards) had given a slip from the battle-field. Many demons were standing unmoved, and they uttered these words. (1466)

"O Raja! Listen. Why are you fighting tthis battle? We wil not let you go alive. You have a heavy built body with a beautiful appearance. Where else will we get such a delicious food? O fool! Listen. You do not realize that we will chew you with our teeth. We will eat your flesh bites, by roasting them in the fire of our arrows. (1467)

Raja had killed the demon Bikrat, and then getting enraged, he addressed the Yama, "So wait, if you happen to kill many beings, and are having a (big) heavy staff in your hand." O Yama! Listen! Now I shall not leave you alive, as I have vowed now to this effect. Whatever (safety measures) you could take you may do so as I am going to kill you now. All the three worlds know very well about my power." (1487)

The poet Ram has stated that the Raja, after saying these words, engaged him in battle. The ghosts, jackals, crows, evil spirits and witches had (drunken) taken blood to their fill. Even the Yama could not kill the Raja, as if he had taken the nectar (and become immortal) Then the Raja took up his bow and arrows in hand and then finally made the Yama flee from the battle front. (1488)

Sortha

When the Yama was made to run away from the battle, then Raja, Kha'rag Singh, looking at Krishna, said, "You are known to be a great charioteer and a great warrior on the battle field, so why do you not come forward to fight with me?" (1489)

The same Sri Krishna, whom many persons, with magic mantras and those meditating on him with penance, had not been able to propitiate him; many had performed Yagnas (sacrificial fires) had given alms in plenty, but they had all failed to realize his Greatness or Vastness. Even Brahma, Indra, Narad, said his praises, the same Sri Krishna was being challenged for a battle by Kha'rag Singh today. (1490)

Chopaiee

Then Sri Krishna took up the "Jachh Astar" (weapon) in hand and stretching his bow, shot the arrow.' That very time Nal, Kuber, and Man-greeve also attacked him, they were both sons of Kuber. (1491)

Kuber, taking demi-gods and Kinars (Shiva's musicians) alongwith him, had landed there with great fury, and his whole army was with him, and he engaged the Raja in a great battle by attacking him. (1492)

Swaiyya

Then all getting enraged, and joining together attacked the Raja, with various weapons in their hands. The Raja, taking out arrows from his quiver and stretching his bow, shot many arrows at the enemy and relieving many of them of their chariots or charioteers, sends the enemy warriors to Yamraj (kills them), and none of them dared to face him. Thus all the demigods and musicians of Shiva were made to flee from the battlefield. (1493)

Then all the warrior musicians of Shiva also accompanied him. Even Ganesh (his son) alongwith his force, marched forward. all the musicians of Shiva, with their weapons also marched ahead, considering in mind, that some invincible warrior had appeared in the world. (1500)

The originator (destruction) of the doomsday had rushed to the field and seeing the situation in battle field, Shiva thought to himself that it was really a matter of concern. (1502)

All the musicians of Shiva, Ganesh, and the six-faced Soani Kartik, saw the whole scene with concentration of mind (with their eyes) and felt that they had been called by Raja Kha'rag Singh for the battle. (1503)

Swaiyya'

"O Shiva! Come and fight with me in the battle-field with all your might you possess. O Ganesh! Are you going to fight against me, have you got so much strength in the body? O six-faced Soami Kartik! Why are you so proud! You will be killed with one arrow only. Why do you want to be killed fighting in the battle field? Nothing is lost yet (so far), so better think twice about it in your mind (before the battle)." (1504)

Then Shiva addressed Kha'rag Singh

Swaiyya'

Shiva, then getting furious with rage, shouted suddenly, "O fool! Why are you feeling so egoistic (proud)? Do not try to fight against such odds. You will very soon know about our might also." If you are so powerful, then why are you delaying any further? Try to hold your bow and arrows. The heavy and big size of your body will be reduced soon, when I will shoot my arrows. (1505)

Swaiyya'

O Shiva! Why are you so proud of yourself? When the killing starts, then you will also run away! With the striking of one arrow only, your whole force will start (dancing) jumping like monkeys. Your force of ghosts and evil-spirits will get killed in the battle, without leaving anyone alive. Listen to me! With your blood shed alone the Earth will be dressed (covered) in red coloured clothes. (1506)

Shiva then hearing these words, took up his bow and stretching it to the ears, shot an arrow, which struck the Raja on the face, penetrating deep into it, as if the Garuda had caught hold of Sheshnag (the cobra). (1507)

The Raja then struck back with his spear, which penetrated into (struck) Shiva's chest and was shining so much, that its beauty has been described by the poet, as if the rays of the sun were falling on the lotus-flower. (1508)

Then Shiva pulled out the spear with both his hands and threw it back by holding it, as if he had thrown a snake (female) by pulling it off. Then the Raja unsheathed his sword, and threw it at Shiva with force. (1509)

Then Shiva fell down unconscious on the Earth (ground). It appeared as if the pinnacle of the mountain had fallen on the strike of a heavy load (stone). The whole army saw this condition of Shiva, then the Shiva's son (Ganesh) took up his spear. (1510)

Holding his spear in hand, Ganesh came face to face with Raja and with great strength he let go the (Shakti) spear pointing at the Raja, as if death was passed on to him instead of a spear. (1511)

Swaiyya'

Raja Kha'rag Singh, (taking his bow) cut the spear into two with a pointed arrow and then shot arrow at the enemy's chest. The poet Siam has stated that the arrow cut the small limbs of the enemy's rat (transport) and shot another arrow at the forehead of Ganesh, which struck him at an angle (with a tilt) . The arrow was looking gracious as if the god like arrow had relieved (got rid of) the (drunkenness) increased pride of Ganesh. (1512)

Then becoming conscious, Shiva rode on his bull and taking his bow, shot an arrow which was pointed and struck the Raja's Chest. With the strike of the arrow, the Raja got puffed up in his mind, he neither was dead nor he got frightened with fear. Then Kha'rag Singh, streched his bow in the hands, and took out an arrow from the quiver. (1513)

On seeing both the enemies advancing towards him, the Raja got enraged with fury, he shot an arrow at Soami Kartika's transport (the peacock's carriage) and killed most of his army in a moment, which had come to attack him. When the arrow struck Kartika, then Ganesh fled away from the battle-field. (1516)

When the Shiva's forces were defeated and made to flee, the Raja felt elated at heart and said, "O (cowards)! Why are you fleeing? Do not try to run away. Thus he told them, so that they could hear. The poet Siam has stated that Kha'rag Singh then sounded his conch shell (in victory) taking it in hand, and then took up his weapons, as if he had landed in the battle field in the form of (Yama) god of death. On hearing this yelling (challenge) all the troops retraced their steps, and wielding their swords in the hands, and becoming furious with rage, they launched an attack. Due to their prestige and honour, neither they were frightened nor they were retreating, and they all joined together in sounding their conch shells. "Kill them, Kill them," such shouts were being heard and were throwing a challenge while shouting. "O (fool!) You have killed many of our warriors. Now we are going to kill you, and will not leave you alive (at any cost)." Thus saying this, they shot many arrows. (1518)

When there was a great blood shed, then the Raja also took up his arms and he challenged the enemy by taking uphis weapons like broad sword, mace, spear, sabre and sword. He also took up his bow and arrows and looking at enemy, killed millions of the enemies. The Raja never turned his face away from the battle field, and even warriors like Yama were defeated by him. (1519)

Then Shiva, taking his bow and arrows was very agitated and enraged. He thought to himself that he must kill the Raja, as such he raced his bull. "I am going to kill him soon in the battle and then saying this to himself, he told him like this and then sounded his conch-shell, as if doomsday had arrived, and the clouds of death were spread all over. (1520).

The sound of this conch shell filled the air, which made Indra also surprised. The seven seas, rivers, great rivulets, tank's and lakes' Waters alongwith the mountains of Vindhyachal and sumer also thundered. That sound made the Sheshnag also tramble, as if an earthquake had rocked the fourteen regions of the Universe. All the people of the world got frightened, but the Raja did not feel any fear at heart. (1521)

Then Kha'rag Singh told Shiva -

Swaiyya'

On seeing the face of Shiva, the Raja uttered these words (to Shiva), "What is the use of a Yogi (ascetic) taking a conch shell in hand for the purpose of showing a hypocrisy to the world, had sounded this noise, while your real task was to beg for rice from house to house. I am not afraid of your stretching the bow with an arrow fitted in, as fighting belonged to the Kashatriyas clan; while the Yogis were not supposed to engage in fighting. (1522)

After saying these words to Shiva the Raja took up a heavy sword in hand in great rage. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja struck the body of Shiva with his sword, with great fury. After wounding the body of Shiva, the Raja laughed and said, "Victory of Jarasandh!" Shiva had fallen down, his necklace of skulls had been scattered and the bull had fallen elsewhere, while his trident fell elsewhere. (1523)

When the Shiva's forces got agitated with rage, they got together and surrounded the Raja, and he stood firmly before them in the battle field without retreating even a step. In the garden like battle field, and the chariot like tank, the trees like banners and warrior like birds were spread all over (filled with). The Shiva's musicians had fled away like birds as if the hawk like Raja had swooped on them. (1524)

Couplet

Except the musicians called Chhaura, Rajsiri, Mahabir and Ma'n Rai, who were standing firmly in the battle field, the rest had fled. (1525)

Swaiyya'

The greatest warriors Man Rai amongst them alongwith Mahabir and Chhaur'a had returned to the battle field. The musicians Chhaura', with red hot iron like eyes, had from his very childhood, caught hold of Yama like a toy. On seeing the enemies approaching him, the Raja never got worried or terrified and killed all the musicians in the battle field. It was not evident whether the Raja had fought a battle or performed a magic spell. (1526)

Whosoever had cast an evil eye towards the Raja, had been killed with shooting of arrows, considering him as his enemy (by the Raja). Then the Raja challenged Ganesh who managed to run away from the battle front. (1527)

When Shiva regained some consciousness, he also fled away from the battle field, and all other musicians also had run away. There was no warriror who could face the Raja (who could face him?). (1528)

When Sri Krishna saw shiva running away, then he thought to himself (in his mind) that he himself should fight againist the Raja thus either killing the enemy or facing death himself in the battle. (1529)

So Sri Krishna then faced the Raja himself. The poet Ram has stated that both of them were engrossed in a fierce battle. Then the Raja, taking an aim at Krishna, shot an arrow at him and threw him down on the ground from his chariot. (1530)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

The Lord, whom Brahma, Indra, and Sankadik etc. were always worshipping and on whom the gods like the sun, and the moon, Narad and Sarad had always meditated with concentration, and whom Sidhas and Munis (ascetics) and the greatest scholar Vyas and Prashar were trying to realize, but could never find his secrets or greatness (was seen helpless) as Kharag Singh had made him unconsious and was holding him with his hair. The same Sri Krishna, who had killed in no time warriors like Pootna, Bakasur, Aghasur, and demon Dhainak and had crushed Kaisi, Bakasur and warriors like Chandoor and whose might was acclaimed throughout the three worlds (was seen in this condition). The poet Siam has stated that who else is there, who could be considered as the worshipper of the Lord among them? It appeared that Kha'rag Singh had taken the revenge from Krishna of holding Kans by his hair (by holding him his hair). (1532)

Then Raja Kharag Singh thought in his mind, that if he were to kill Krishna now, then after his army had fled, with whom will he fight in battle. On whom will he inflict wounds and against whom will he get wounded himself by facing him? So considering this Kharag Singh let go Krishna scot free and said, "O Krishna! Go away freely, as I shall not find another warrior, like you again in the whole world." (1533)

This sort of bravery, shown by the Raja (Kharag Singh) had never before, been shown by anyone else. All the other warriors had fled away, having seen the Raja's prowess and no one had dared to face him by taking his bow and arrows in hand. Disarming themselves of all weapons, and without having a second thought, the charioteers had deserted their chariots and fled away, being afraid of the Raja. Kha'rag Singh, the great warrior, having shown great prowess in the battle field, and having subjugated Sri Krishna, he had let, him go scotfree. (1534)

Chopaiee

When the Raja let loose Krishna's hold from his hair, then Krishna, due to loss of his prestige, had forgotten all his power, and might. Then Brahma appeared before him in person and helped him to forget about his affliction (of losing prestige) relieving him of his pain. (1535)

Brahma then said-

When this Raja took birth in the world, he had left his home and had proceeded to the jungle, making it as his abode. He had prayed and performed penance, thus propitiating the world's (God) Lord and had gained the boon of winning always against the enemy. (1537)

"There is only one way (design) to kill him. O Lord! I will tell you by relating the whole episode. Even if Vishnu himself were to fight against this Raja, he would take no time in making him (Vishnu) also flee (by winning over him). (1538)

Even if we were to call for Indra's help alongwith attack on him, alongwith twelve suns, and launch an attack on him, alongwith eleven (Shivas) Rudras; even if we had the moon, Yama (god of death), and eight basus on our side, even then we cannot defeat him (the Raja) so Brahma related this episode to Sri Krishna (thus explaining the secret of his success). With amorous eye movements, those fairies were dancing, while all gods joined together in singing songs. All the musical instruments like lyre (plate), pakharaj (drums) cymbals and tambor rine were being played, and the fairies were showing their colourful performance by combining the various ragas in their music like Sarang, Sorath Malsri, Ramkali and Nat etc. ragas. The god Varuna had been pierced all over with the arrows and he shot many arrows at the chest of Nal, Kuber and Yama. What more could the poet Siam describe about this battle? The Raja had killed everyone, who happened to be present in the battle field. Everyone was worried about his own life (safety), and none dared to look at Kha'rag Singh. They all thought to themselves that it was the end of the ages (Yugas) or the doomsday had arrived. (1548)

Chopaiee

All had fled from the battle field out of (great) fear, and none tried to engage with him in fighting and everyone thought that he could not be killed by anyone. (1549)

When all the troops were killed by the Raja, then Brahma, approaching near Krishna, said "that so long Kha'rag Singh was having the teta (talisman) for his proctection, neither Indra nor Shiva could match his prowess. (1550)

So the best solution would be to beg for his talisman (magic spell) posing as a beggar. He had gained a crown from Rama, which Indra or other gods had not obtained. (1551)

Once you take away that teta (magic sign), then he could be killed in no time. The teta had to be taken away from him at any cost, then only the Raja could possibly be killed. (1552)

On hearing this, Sri Krishna disguised himself as a brahmin and both Sri Krishna and Brahma came to him seeking the alms of (gift of) that teta (talisman) and he recognized them. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja replied to them in this fashion. (1553)

Kha'rag Singh said -

Swaiyya'

"O Krishna! You have disguised yourself as a brahmin just as Vishnu had taken the form of a divar (baman) to deceive the king Bal. O four-faceted Brahma! You should go to the jungh on whose behalf have you come here, leaving your meidtation and penance? I have recognised you both just as the fire cannot be kept a secret due to its smoke, similarly I have recognized you due to your deceit." Since you have disguised yourself as beggars, you may ask for (alms) whatever you had thought of in your mind. (1554)

Couplet

When the Raja said like this, Brahma then said, "O Raja! By giving the alms, you will gain the praises of the world. Pray give me the crown, which you had gained from the scarificial fire of the Yagna!" (1555)

When Brahma said like this, then Sri Krishna said to the Raja, "The teta, which Parbati had given to you, that may be given to me in alms (as gift), O persevering Raja!" (1556)

Then the Raja thought to himself (in his mind)!" O my mind! You cannot live long enough, for all the four ages (Yugas), so there is no need to delay this job of religious duty (moral function); so whatever Krishna had asked for, may be given to him." (1557)

Swaiyya'

"O my mind! Why do you worry about this human body as you cannot live permanently in this world? So there is no other better function for me (than giving him alms) which will (earn) give you praises in the battle field, and after giving away this life (after death) you will proceed to heavens, as well in the end. O my mind! Why are you delayingg this good deed, as by losing this chance, you might have to repent later. So forget about your worry and give away the gift (alms) without any second thoughts, as a beggar like the Lord (Krishna) would not come my way (cross me) in future." (1558)

"O my mind! Whatever Brahma and Krishna had asked for (in alms), may be given to them without any doubt or hesitation to the Lord, from whom the whole world seeks blessings, was seeking something from you, so there is no use delaying this noble deed (and give away the gifts asked for). There is no need for any other consideration, as there would be no harm in doing this function. Do not feel any pride (egoism) in giving away the alms, and get the worldly praise by giving away the land and wealth in alms. (1559)

So the Raja gave away to the brahmin in disguise, (Krishna), whatever he had aksed for. The poet Ram has stated that whatever Brahma had wished for, was also fulfilled. So the Raja gave away whatever they had asked for, and while giving these gifts, the Raja was filled with the love of the Lord. So the Raja had earned the praises of the whole world both in (giving) alms or (wielding) sword and won the eternal praise in all the three worlds. (1560)

So Brahma got the crown and Krishna took the talisman from the Raja, then all the warriors were roaring with happiness, and all of them attacked the Raja; who was filled with rage and frustration. The Raja also killed many warriors again, who were looking graceful lying on the ground as if some asetics, with ash rubbed all over the body and having eaten (dhatura) the drug, were lying asleep on the ground. (1561)

All of them had jointly encircled the Raja, and he was very furious with rage. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja went around the battle field and took up his heavy bow and arrows in hand and killed many warriors of the forces of the sun, the moon, Yama and Sri Krishna. It appeared as if the winds of Phalgun (Jan-Feb.) had caused the withering leaves to fall down from the trees. (1562)

The Raja, taking his big bow, shot an arrow at the forehead of Shiva, another arrow at the heart of Kuber, who fled away leaving his weapons at the striking of the arrow. Seeing his condition, even the god Varuna also ran away from the battle front, feeling greatly frightened at heart. Then Yama (god of death) attacked the Raja, who (Yama) was also felled on the ground by a striking arrow of the Raja (Kha'rang Sing). (1563)

When the Yama had fallen down, the forces of Sri Krishna got excited and attacked the Raja. Then two warriors came foreward, furious with rage, and attacked with various weapons. One Yadav, by name Balwant Singh, was killed by the Raja who was enraged, the second one was Bahobali, brother of Barmahirt, who was also despatched to the hell by the Raja from the battle field (was killed). (1564)

Then accompanying him were Mahabali Singh and Jas Singh, who were also killed by the Raja. Then the mighty Jas Singh came forward with great fury. He was also challenged by the Raja and was called to fight with him when the Raja took out his sword with great fury, and he was also killed with one blow of the sword only. (1565)

Then Himmat Singh wounded the Raja with a powerful strike, and when he turned back towards his army, the Raja again challenged him and called him back, and struck his head with his sword. He fell down split into two pieces on the ground and could not survive the attack. It appeared as if the sword struck like lightning and had torn apart the mountain from its middle. (1574)

When Himmat Singh wa killed, all his companion warriors became furious with rage, and Great Rudar type of warriors all launched an attack on him (Raja). The poet Siam has stated that they launched together many attacks with various weapons like bow and arrows, swords, mace and spears etc., but the Raja had saved all their on-slaughts. Seeing his prowess like this, the Yadava warriors were all terror stricken. (1575)

All the gods and Shiva's musicians like Rudar then jointly made an attack on the Raja. But seeing them advancing the mighty Raja took out his bow and arrows, and stretching the bow fully and challenging them, he shot many arrows. Out of them, many got wounded then and there and fell down while many of them fled away out of fear, from the battlefield. But some powerful warriors continued fighting without harbouring any fear, but finally the Raja managed to kill all of them. (1576)

The Raja had won over about ten thousand musicians of Shiva and then with great wrathfulness the Raja had killed about a lakh of demi-gods. The poet Siam has stated that apart from this the Raja has killed about 23 lakhs of demons, who were sent to the hell. Even Sri Krishna was relieved of his chariot and the charioteer was also wounded badly. Tweleve (gods) suns, moons, Kuber, Varuna and Shiva had given the slip, on seeing the battle swings. (1577)

Then he had killed about ten thousand elephants, and killed with ruthlessness about thirty thousand warrior charioteers, apart from this, thirty six lakhs infantry troops had been killed alongwith ten thousand horse riders (cavalry). Then he had killed about a lakh of kings (Rajas), while the demi-gods had been made to flee by giving them good beating. Twelve suns, eleven Rudra's armies had been beaten and still the Raja was advancing. (1578)

Then sixty thousand more warriors had been killed by the Raja alongwith many lakhs of demi-gods. Lakhs of Yadavas were rendered chariot-less while making an aim at many demi-gods (and injuring them). Fifty lakhs of infantry troops had been killed and they were thrown on the ground, being cut into pieces. Many other warriors, who tried to attack, were also killed by the Raja with his sword. Twistin g his moustaches, Raja Kha'rag Singh without any fear or reservations launched an attack on the enemy, and had killed about one lakh riders with great strength and completely devastated the pride of the sun and moon (gods). With another arrow he felled Yama also onto the ground. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja was not afraid of anyone. Whosoever had tried to call himself a great warrior in the battle field was smitten into pieces by (the Raja) Kha'rag Singh. (1580)

Then he had killed ten lakhs of dem-gods in the battle field and about a lakh warriors of the god Varuna were also done to death, alongwith countless warriors of Indra also. The poet Siam has stated that the same Raja was still unnerved. He had rendered Satak, Balram and Basudev unconscious (with his strikes). The Yama (god of death) and Indra had fled away and none of them could face him armed with his weapons. (1581)

When Krishna came in a revengeful mood with his bow with full strength, then Raja Kharag Singh, with increased wrath in mind, started singing the praises of Sri Krishna (Pause). "Whose glory was known in all the three worlds (regions), whose limits were not knwon to Sheshnag even, whose secrets were not known to Vedas even, he is called the son of Nand and who has tamed the deadly Kali (cobra) and had killed Kansa by holding him by his hair, I have called him before me in the battle field, getting furious with rage. The poet Ram has stated that Sri Krishna, on whom the Munis (great asetics) meditate with concentration and they have not realized him in the heart but due to my good fortune, I have been fighting with such a powerful person, a fierce battle. (1583)

Sri Krishna had honoured me, and normally he is not realized by studying the six Shastras (does not reveal to those reading Shastras), has appeared before me in person (Pause).

I know that there is no other warrior as powerful as myself in the world, and I have invited Sri Krishna in the battle field to fight with me. I have called the same Sri Krishna being furious with rage, to fight with me, whom Sukhdev, Narad Muni, Sarda etc. worship by singing his praises, but have not known his infinite powers. (1584)

After singing Sri Krishna's praises, the Raja took up his bow, and then launched an attack on him by shooting many arrows. The warriors who happened to come to the battle field were not allowed to go back alive by the Rja and had killed most of them. He did not attack those warriors, who had been wounded earlier (as they were dead). The Raja had destroyed the Yadava army and then attacked Sri Krishna as well. (1585)

The crown on Sri Krishna's head had been thrown on the ground with his arrow. Fifteen hundred heavily armed elephants from the cluster of elephants had been killed alongwith many horses. Then he had defeated (won over) about twelve lakhs demigods also and most of the troops were rendered lifeless (killed). By witnessing such a battle being fought, the warriors had lost their pride (prestige). (1586)

The Raja had continued his fight against Sri Krishna for about ten days and ten nights and was still not relenting. He had killed the four-coloured army of Satkrit, being enraged. Many warriors were lying unconsious on the ground, and the warriors had lost their courge by fighting against him. Many had fled out of fear. Then Kharag Singh challenged those run-aways by shouting, "Where are you running?" (1587)

On hearing the Raja's challenge, all came back again and the Raja shot pointed arrows at them, and they fell down on the way; while the arrows hit their protective coat of iron and pierced through to the other side. Some of them ran with shields covering their faces and then directed their weapon on the Raja. Seeing the prowess of the single person (Raja) they were all frightened to the bones in the battle field. (1588)

Indra, the great elephant of Satkrit, getting enraged, attacked the Raja and was trumpeting like the cloud on appearing and was making him realize his strength. The Raja then held his sword in hand on seeing him coming, and cut off his trunk like hand, so he fled back. The poet has seen this beauty as if the elephant had forgotten his trunk at home only. (1589)

They had worn coats of iron (protective cover), and were having quivers around the waist and all were furious with rage, having various weapons in hand. They were tilting their eyes, pressing their lips with gnashing of teeth and were having their brows raised in fury. They attacked from all the four sides by shouting a challenge, thus inflicting many wounds on the Raja. (1593)

What else could I add as even Shiva had been defeated by him. He was never frightened of all the Yadavas and had fought against them well with great bravery. Look, the Raja had won the battle against us openly. (1597)

Then Nahar Khan, Jhu'rajha'r Khan, and Balbir Bahadur Khan, then Nihang Khan, Bha'ang and Jhar'ang Khan advanced to fight, who were never afraid of him. The cowards were always frieghtened to see them and who were not subdued by mighty warriors. All those Khans, with their bows and arrows in hands, attacked full of egoism. (1600)

Jehad Khan, Jabar Khan, and Wahid Khan like warriors had accompanied them. They advanced with full force from all the four sides and were greatly agitated with rage. These white coloured muslims and brown coloured muslims had attacked Raja Kha'rag Singh. But the Raja taking his bow and arrows destroyed all of them, who were invincible. (1601)

With great fury, the army of muslims from two groups was reduced to pieces. The warriors had fallen down, somewhere horses were lying dead, while elsewhere the warriors had reeled down and fallen, while at places heavy elephants were lying on the ground. Somewhere the wounded warriors were feeling dizzy they could not speak as their strength had deserted them. It appeared as if a great Muni (ascetic) were sitting in meditation, or great seekers of truth were concentrating in meditation. (1602)

When Raja Kha'rag Singh fought the battle with such force, them Nahar Khan in great fury came in front of him. He attacked getting hold of his weapons and shouting challenge at him, who was trotting his horse with force. Raja Kha'rag Singh, holding him from his hair, threw him on the ground with a sudden jerk. The poet Siam has stated that Nahar Khan, seeing his helpless condition, ran away from the field and could not face him. (1603)

When Nahar Khan had run away, then Jhara'jhar' Khan, getting enraged came forward. He came upon the Raja like a Yama (god of death) (attacked him) by taking up his weapons. The Raja shot many arrows at him, while he also shot many arrows at the Raja. Then Shiva's musicians (Kinar) and demigods were all praise for the warriors and the four worlds were singing songs of victory. (1604)

Khar'ar Singh then addressed all the warriors - Swaiyya'

Kha'rag Singh never shows his back (retreat) in the battle field even though the sun were to rise from the west, the river Ganga were to flow in opposite direction, (this thought may cross your mind) or snow were to fall in the month of Jeth (May/Jue), or the wind in spring were to burn the forest, the Pole Star were to shift its position, the oceans were converted to land or the lands were converted into waters (oceans) or the sume'r mountain were to fly taking up wings, (these impossible things could happen) but (Kharag Singh will ever face the enemy). (1613)

Saying this, the Raja took up his bow and with shooting arrows, he had killed many warriors of the enemy. Some rushed forward to face him, while some others had run away, while some others had changed their position. Many warriors had been thrown on the ground with his strikes. Seeing this situation, many warriors had retreated. The poet Siam has stated that hardly any warriors worth their names were left alive in the battle field. (1614)

Then Arjun took up another bow and had shot an arrow at the Raja. With the very strike of the arrow, the Raja had lost all his egoism and consciousness, and he was in great calamity (with pain). Seeing Arjuna's bravery, the Raja (Kharag Singh) was very pleased in his mind and said loudly, Blessed is the father and the mother who had given birth to a person (warrior) called Arjuna. (1618)

Kha'rag Singh then told Arjuna -
Swaiyya'

The moustache is sprouting on your face and your both the eyes are like beautiful lotus flowers and your hair are long enough reaching upto your waist like the black snakes (twins). Your face is shining like the moon, giving solace to all, which relieves the pangs of suffering of the black partridge. How could I kill such a handsome person? I am feeling pity for you in my mind on seeing your face. (1619)

Arjun, on seeing Kha'rag Singh and then on hearing his words, laughed and with fury at heart walked away. He took up his bow and arrows in hand and then challenging him, he attacked the Raja, without having any fear.From the other side Kharag Singh also faced him. Both fought fiercely by shooting arrows at each other. Then, leaving Arjuna alone, the Raja attacked Bhim. (1620)

Then Bhisham Pitama, getting furious with rage, shot many arrows at the Raja. The Raja had cut off all his on-coming arrows with his own arrows and advanced wielding his sword. Then a fierce battle was raging and getting enraged the Raja told Bhisham, that "You will realize my prowess only when you will proceed to hell (get killed). (1627)

Couplet

The Raja had realized this that Bhisham Pitama was not likely to flee from the battle front. Thinking of this, the Raja cut off the head of his charioteer with one arrow. (1628)

Swaiyya'

On the death of the charioteer, the horses fled away from the battle field taking away Bhisham, then Duryodhana was filled with great fury. So taking (Ashvasthama) Daronacharya's son, kirpacharya, and Barmakrit Yadava he attacked the Raja (Kha'rag Singh). Then Daronacharya, taking up his bow and arrows, with stubbornness advanced without harbouring any fear. All fought a fierce battle with their weapons like swords, daggers, tridents, bayonets and wheels. (1629)

Then Krishna told Kha'rag Singh -

Swaiyya'

Then Sri Krishna, taking his bow, told Kha'rag Singh. "I shall kill you right now. O fool! So what if you have managed to fight for another hour, as you are going to die soon. I know that your death has approached. Even now you may remember your saviour! "Saying this, Sri Krishna shot an arrow from his bow. (1630)

Couplet

After cutting the coming arrow with his arrow, Kha'rag Singh with great fury said, "Even Sheshnag, Indra and Shiva etc. have known my power." (1631)

Kabit

"O Krishna! When I wield my sword, I would chew even the ghosts and make the gods and demons both flee from the battle field and would throw you on the ground by holding you from the arms. I would fight a fierce battle and make Bhairava (diety) dance in the battle field.

O Krishna! Listen! I am telling you the truth, and then you should not run away' (from the battle field). What is the value of brahmin Daronacharya, and it will not take me any time (a moment) to kill him. If I wish (so desire) I could kill Indra, Yama, and Rudra alongwith all their force or power. O Krishna, Radha's lover! Since I am engaged in a battle against you, I Khahag Singh, Kashatriya, am tolerating to hear these coarse words." (1632)

Then Daronacharya, greatly agitated wiith fury, came in front of Kha'rag Singh (Raja) and fought a fierce battle, armed with various weapons and protective cover. Both the warriors fought a dreaded battle, so that both the warriors were drenched in blood (in blood bath), their dresses were turned into red-coloured clothes, as if their clothes were dreched in red colour while playing holi, (by throwing coloured waters). All the gods, seeing this scene, have stated that both the brahmins (Daronacharya and Kirpacharya) and Raja Kha'rag Singh were really blessed, as such a blood battle had not been fought on the Earth so far before. (1633)

Couplet

Then the Pandava forces getting furious with rage, including Arjuna, Bhisham Pitama, Bhim Sain, Daronacharya Kirpacharya and Daryodhana encircled Kha'rag Singh. (1634)

Kabit

They surrounded the Raja joinly as the barbed wire surrounds the field, meditation surrounds the noose of death, the beggars encircle the donor, the bracelets cover the hand or the body covers the soul, the family surrounds the sun and moon, the ignorance surrounds the knowledge, and the milkmaids have surrounded Krishna or the tank surrounds water, the rosary surrounds the meditation, the sins surround the virtuous deeds, and the round creeper encircles the tree, the stars surround the Pole Star (Dharuv) or the oceans surround the Earth. Similarly all the warriors had surrounded Kha'rag Singh, the great warrior. (1635)

When Kha'rag Singh was encircled by them, Darondhana got furious with rage. Even Arjuna, Bhim Sain, Yudhishtra, Bhisham Pitama were enraged and Balram took up his hoe. Karun, Daronacharya, Kirpacharya advanced towards the enemy with their swords in hand and the fighting took a turn using weapons, legs, fists and teeth even. (1636)

Sri Kha'rag Singh took up his bow, and killed many of the enemy warriors. Somewhere horses were lying dead, at places the crowns of heads were lying, and at places black elephants like huge mountains were lying on the ground. Some wounded soliders were pining (in pain) as if the black deer was killed by the lion. Some warriors had removed the heads of corpses even with their swords. (1637)

Raja Kha'rag Singh, using his bow and arrows had completely annihilated the egoism (prestige) of Yadava warriors, then he took up his death-like weapon and pierced the chests of the enemy. Some warriors had fallen, being wounded, in the battle field and were praying to the Lord (in mind). As a result, they had attained Salvation, and had gone to the heavens having swum the ocean of life. (1638)

The warriors, who were simply brave, were cut into pieces (by the enemy) very soon. We cannot even think of that battle; but those, who were running away, were addressed by Arjuna (like this). (1639)

Swaiyya'

O Brave Men! Complete the work of Sri Krishna to day itself, and do not retreat at all. Take up your bows and arrows, attack Raja Kha'rag Singh by challenging him. By joining together, all of you should shout, "Kill the enemy" and take up your weapons for the battle. You should try to sustain the prestige of your clan and fight with Kha'rag Singh withou having any fear at heart. (1640)

Karun became excited with rage, and came in front of the Raja. Holding his bow in hand he put (fixed) an arrow in the bow and stretching it spoke these words, "The deer has come in the mouth of lion." When he said these words, the Raja heard it. Then the Raja, taking his bow and arrows in hand, tried to make him realize by saying this. (1641)

O Karuna! Why do you lose your life by fighting with me? It would be better for you to go home and live longer for sometime more. Why do you want to take poison, with your hands? Go home and enjoy the nectar rather! saying these words, the Raja then shot an arrow and said, "Now take the fruits of your fight (battle) against me." With the striking of the arrow Karuna fell down unconsious and with the blood oozing from the body, the whole body was drenched in blood. (1642)

By that time Bhim with his mace, and Arjuna with his bow in hand, came there for attack. Bhisham Pitama, Daronacharya, Kirpacharya, Sehdev and Bhursharva also got enraged and came there followed by Raja Yudishtra and Sri Krishna alongwith their forces. Even the greatest warriors had inherited a certain fear in the mind due to the fear of Raja's ability to shoot arrows. (1643)

By that time Sri Krishna also became furious with rage, and shot an arrow at the chest of the Raja. By a second arrow he managed to cut the hands of the charioteer but the Raja continued to advance forward without having any fear and never retraced his steps or retrated from the battle field. All the warriors were all praise for him, and even poet Siam has praised his bravery like this. (1644)

On seeing Krishna's face, the Raja said like this. "O Krishna! Your tresses of hair are long enough upto your waist, and their praise cannot be described, while your eyes are shining beautifully, and there is none other worthy of such praise. O Krishna! You better go away from here, as I will let you go safely. What will you gain by fighting with a stubborn attitude?" (1645)

The Raja, taking up his bow and arrows, again said, "O Krishna! Listen to my talk. Why do you take up cudgels against me confronting me in the battle field? I will kill you right now, and shall not spare you. It would be better, if you were to go home, as nothing has been lost so far. You better take my advice, and do not make the beautiful women of the town suffer in your absence unnecessarily." (1646)

"O Krishna! I have already done to death most of the warriors due to my stubborn attitude. O Krishna! On whose bidding have you decided to confront me in the battle and seeing my expertise in fighting, you have not cared to withdraw? Now what for should I kill you? I am feeling great pity for you. Bhoorsarvaa kurraaj sab lakhi rann bheer. (1651)

On hearing such words, Sri Krishna took up his bow and arrows and with great fury confronted Raja Kha'rag Singh. The poet Siam has stated, that on coming there a fierce battle ensued for about six hours with shooting of arrows. Sri Krishna had felled (thrown) the Raja on the ground and the Raja threw Krishna out of his chariot and on to the ground. On seeing this wonderful scene, the warriors were praising both the brave men and sang their praises. (1648)

Then Sri Krishna rode on his chariot while Kha'rag Singh also rode his chariot. With both of them getting furious with rage, they unsheathed their swords. A great force of the Pandava sons was agitated with wrathfulness. The sounds produced by the use of various weapons was just like the recitation of Vedas which was being recited by Arjuna according to certain principles. (1649)

On seeing the forces of Daryodhana, the Raja shot many arrows, and many mighty warriors had been sent to heavens (killed). Bhisham Pitama and Daronacharya etc. had fled from the battle and none could dare to face the Raja squarely. Then all of them left all hopes of a victory and none came forward to confront the Raja. (1650)

The son of Daronacharya, (Asthothama) and Kirpacharya had run away from there and none was left with enough perseverence to continue fighting. Kursarva and Daryodhana seeing the devastation of battle front, also retracted from there. (1651)

All the gods including Rudra and their forces had attacked the Raja, but he had fought with great valour and shot many arrows by stretching his bow and challenging them all. Many of them had got wounded and fallen there while many others had fled away, out of fear, from the battle field. Many had fought bravely without having any fear but were finally killed by the Raja. The poet Siam has stated that when Ajit Singh had engaged Kha'rag Singh in a fierce battle, then all his companions like Shiva, Sun etc. raised their hands to kill the enemy. Many arrows were sprayed in the battle field but the Raja managed to cut off all the arrows, and was greatly peeved at heart. Then the mighty Raja, took out his bow and arrows and shot at the warrior while no one came to his rescne. (1672)

Chopaiee

When Ajit Singh was killed and thrown on the ground, then all the warriors were shaken up thoroughly (at heart) and all got worried (terrified). Then the Raja wielded his sword and all the warriors were wonder-struck and their strength gave way. (1673)

Then Vishnu, Shiva and Brahma consulted each other that neither this Raja could be killed nor burnt in the fire, so they should do something so that Raja could be killed or burnt in the fire, so they should find some other means (solution) to deal with him, so that this Raja could be killed. (1674)

Then Brahma suggested that they should adopt some other design (means) by which his heart was enamoured, and then he would lose all his courage. When the Raja would be seen in a crest-fallen condition, then he could be killed easily. (1675)

Then they decided to call the fairies, who would perform such a function, which would please the Raja. When the Raja would get involved in their magic-spells, then his mind would be weakened, and his strength would give-in (he would be losing his power). (1676)

Swaiyya'

So all the women folk of the various gods started dancing (in heaven) while on the other side the warriors joined together in their fighting. All the musicians of Shiva, (Kinar and Gandharb) or the celestial singers (mythological) statred singing and the Maru Raga was sung and in the battle field songs were being sung (in that Raga). As a result the Raja Kha'rag Singh's heart was enamoured by the musical atmosphere. Then all of a sudden, Krishna took up his bow and stretching it shot a strong arrow at the Raja's body. (1678)

With the striking of the arrow, the Raja became unconscious, even then he killed many warriors by shooting his arrows. The eleven Rudras musicians, in countless numbers, were thus killed and many warriors by shooting his arrows. The eleven Rudras musicians, in countless numberes, were thus killed, who proceeded to Shiva's domain. The twelve suns, Varuna god, the moon, Indra and Kuber lost their limbs (with those arrows). The poet Siam has stated that the Raja had dishonoured all those warriors, who were standing close by (with his valour). (1679)

Indra was hit by sixty arrows, and Krishna's body was pierced with two hundred arrows, while Yama was hit by sixty four arrows, and the twelve suns got wounded with the striking of twelve arrows. The poet Siam has stated that the moon was hit by one hundred arrows while Rudra was hit by four hundred arrows. All their clothes were draped in blood, as if the warriors had just come after playing holi (coloured waters festival). (1680)

The Raja had killed many other warriors; in fact whosoever dared to fight, was killed. Then Brahma came to the Raja and according to the poet Siam, he told the Raja these words. (1681)

Brahma said, "O Raja! Why are you killing them all in the battle? Why are you shooting these arrows without any purpose? So now you do this act only, without any further delay, and proceed towards the heavens. (1682)

Do not think in your mind about the progress of this battle and better perform some (Pious) acts for the next world. So agree to my proposal without any further delay! (1683)

Swaiyya'

O Brahma! Listen to me with full concentration and keep my words intact in both your ears. When the mind gets interested (swept away) in praising some one, then one should praise the Lord Almighty only. It is not worth while worshipping anyone else (paying obeisance to others), except paying obeisance to the Lord, Guru or the brahmin. The Lord, whose name is recited during all the four ages, if one faces death by fighting against him, then one gets Salvation (one is able to cross this worldly ocean successfully). (1688)

The Lord whom Sankadik and sheshnag have been trying to realize, but whose greatness (limits) has not been known by them, (is worth realizing). The poet Siam has stated that in all the fourteen worlds, the great Rishi Sukhdev and Vyas have been singing praises of the same Lord. It is the Lord's True Name alone, and its greatness that Dhruv and Prahlad have attained a prominent position in the Universe (through its recitation). The same Lord would be fighting with me, who has called himself Sri Dha'r and Sri Har (Sri Krishna), (and I shall attain Salvation by dying at his hands). (1689)

Aril

Brahma got shocked (surprised) by hearing such words (of Kha'rag Singh) and at that very moment realized that the Raja was great follower (lover) of Vishnu. By seeing the Raja's face he said, "Blessed are you, O Raja!" and Brahma became dumb-founded by considering his love (for the Lord). (1690)

The fairies of heavens were watching this, scene, and the Raja got enamoured by viewing their beautiful eyes, Narad and Brahma were both in the battle field. Sri Krishna, viewing it as the right opportunnity, shot an arrow for killing the enemy (killing arrow). Thus with great force of magic-spell through deceit the head of the Raja was cut off from his body. (1700)

Even though his head was removed, but the Raja did not relent from fighting. He caught hold of his head by the hair and threw it at Sri Krishna. It appeared as if the soul was going to heavens and the face came to take leave of Sri Krishna. The head hit the chest of Sri Krishna, and he fell down unconscious, as he could not maintain his balance. See the might of the Raja's head that it threw Krishna off his chariot on to the ground. (1701)

The type of bravery shown by the Raja was unique, which no one else had shown before. On seeing this bravery, the lady demi-gods, women musicians of Shiva, and the queens of all the gods were all praise for him and came down on Earth, singing by using their musical instuments like mirdang, upang, muchang, and using a tune, tender and bewitching. They were all happily singing, dancing, making others delighted as well. The poet has praised it. (1702)

The beautiful women folk came down from heavens alongwith all the musical instruments of the gods. What for had they come down? The poet Siam has stated that they had come down to wed the Raja; and this was the reason for their landing. (1703)

By that time (the headless) trunk of the Raja was agitated with rage greatly. The poet Siam has stated that (the trunk) attacked the place where twelve suns were standing, and all of them fled away out of fear. Then this trunk attacked the place, where Shiva was standing. The Raja (trunk of Raja) then slapped suddenly various mighty warriors and threw them down on the ground (with strikes). (1704)

Some of them were slapped down while some others were admonished and threatened down; some of them were pierced through into two pieces, while some others were thrown up towards the skies. Thus the horses were striking the horses, the chariots were mowing down the enemy chariots and the elephants were striking the elephants. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja (his trunk) was killing the enemy troops in the battle field (and sending them to Yama's place). (1705)

After regaining consciousness Krishna got into his chariot and he was furious with rage. Picking up courage, he unsheathed his sword and he attacked the Raja (his trunk) with great force and yelling (shouting) as if the ocean was flooding (was in rising tide) and he was shooting his arrows with great strength while the warriors were in high spirits. (1706)

When the warriors attacked, the trunk of the Raja was attacking with increased force, thinking in his mind to kill all those warriors. He launched an attack on the enemy who fled away. The poet Ram has praised this scene as if the sun had appeared in the sky littered with stars, and the darkness had disappeared. (1707)

All the warriors including Krishna had fled away and none dared to face him, as if the warriors had taken him to be the god of death (the Raja's trunk was death like). The arrows from the Raja's bow were being shot like the rain fall from the clouds on doomsday. Seeing the prevailing situation, all the warriors had run away, and none tried to fight against the Raja. (1708)

When all the warriors had fled away, the Raja mingled with the Lord (lay dead). he gave up his fighting and meditating on Sri Krishna, he was in a trance, without having any interest in the kingdom or the royal society. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja was completely engrossed in meditation of Sri Krishna, and he was standing like a rock on the battle-front. Let us all praise the Raja as there would be none like him, as fortunate as the Raja. (1709)

When Sri Krishna and others thought of some designs to deal with this trunk, (thought of some means to throw it down). The poet Siam has stated that all of them started pouring a stream of arrows (shooting arrows at him), then all the godly-women took the Raja on their chariot, but he jumped off the chariot and came back to the battle-field, armed with his weapons. (1710)

Couplet

Armed with his bow and arrows, he again came back to the battle front, and after killing many warriors, he challenged the god of death (laid down his life). (1711)

When at the final call, the Yamas arrived to take the Raja (to heavens) he again shoots his arrows and gets on one side, on the sight of `death. Even after death be fails him, he does not give in (to die). (1712)

Then looking at the enemy, with indignation, he rushes towards them, as if he had taken the form of the (Yama) god of death. Thus he had fought with the enemy bravely. Even Shiva, Vishnu, Brahma and other warriors were afraid of him. (1713)

Drop your weapons from the hands, leaving aside your wrathfulness, and keep your self in peace and tranquillity. We are all leaving our weapons and you get into the chariot for proceeding to heavens. (1714)

Chhapai Chhand

The sword (Kharag) power, was given by Shiva's son Kartika Soami; so he attained complete victory. Rama (Lachhmi) had given him beauty, so his intelligence was supreme and pure. Ganesh had given him garima sidhi (occult power) and Singhi Rishi had given him Singhnad. So he could fight fiercely because Ghansham had made him like this. That is how the Raja was created in the world. Then Balram said, "O Brijnath! You have made us from helpless to powerful men, and we have killed such a powerful enemy in the battle-filed." (1729)

Sri Krishna also got enraged and taking his bow and arrows he also rushed to the battle front, and attacked the enemy, and killing most of them caused a great blood-shed there. The horse and elephant riders alongwith charioteers were in great trouble, and none of them could stay any longer to oppose him. All were fleeing away, but were getting furious with rage. They were unable to control the situation and were facing the onslaught with suffering. (1742)

When the enemy forces had fled away, then Sri Krishna took up (his) courage, and fell upon the commander of the enemy force, facing him where he stood by, thinking of the Raja in his mind. Sri Krishna took up his bow and arrow and demolished the pride (prestige) of Jarasandh. (1743)

When the arrows were being shot by Sri Krishna's bow, then who could dare to face them? Whosoever was hit by the arrows in the chest, would be killed (immediately) in a moment. No such warrior had existed in the world, who could withstand and oppose Sri Krishna with courage? Then the warriors of Jarasandh told him that Sri Krishna was advancing killing all their troops. (1744)

The arrows, being shot by Sri Krishna, had killed many of the warriors of Jarashandh. Whosoever dared to oppose Sri Krishna, was desptached to heavens (killed) in no time. On seeing the wonderful acts of Sri Krishna in the battle field, the enemy warriors told the Raja, like this and the Raja told them, "Let him come upto me." (I will deal with him). (1745)

When the Raja saw Sri Krishna advancing towards him, he also went ahead with his troops to oppose him. He asked his men to go forward and blew his conch shell, by taking it in hand. The poet Siam has stated that he felt greatly terrified on approaching the battle front, though on hearing the sound of conch shell the warriors got encouraged with increased (raised) morale. (1746)

Couplet

A huge force of Jarasandh had invaded the battle front, which was killed in no time by Sri Krishna by taking up his bow and arrows in his hand. (1747)

Swaiyya'

The arrows, leaving the bow of Sri Krishna (being shot by him) would make millions of enemy troops dumb-founded (unconscious). Many huge elephants were lying dead on the ground. It appeared as if trees had been cut with the saws, which were lying on the ground. Who could count the number of warriors lying dead at that place? (were countless). The heads of fallen Kashatriyas had become withered. If we were to consider the battle-field as a tank (of water) and with the storm of the battle brewing therein, hundreds of flowers and leaves in the form of warriors, were fallen or strewn therein. (1748)

Due to the wounds inflicted, many warriors were reeling under their effect, and blood was oozing out of them. Due to this condition, many warriors had fled away throwing away their weapons, and many were roaming around losing their senses like mad persons. The warriors who die there, showing their backs to the battle front are dishonoured since their flesh is not liked by the vultures or jackals even. Some warriors in the battle field were shouting around, as if drunken elephants were moving around in the jungle. (1749)

Sri Krishna was wielding his swrod in such a manner, that many mighty enemies were done to death by him. Sri Krishna had destroyed many riders of horses and elephants (hundreds of them) by killing them. Some of them had their heads cut off, while some warriors had their chests pierced through. Thus considering Sri Krishna's dreadful form many enemy troops had run away from the battle field, while some others had been killed. (1750)

Kabit

Then Sri Krishna, becoming enraged, had taken up his bow and arrows again in his hands and was on a killing spree, while many charioteers were divested of their chariots even. The battle was so fierce, as if Rudra (Shiva) had destroyed the whole world. The poet Ram has stated that Sri Krishna was so powerful that at times he was flashing his sword or the sudarshan wheel was being used in action. The clothes were coloured red with blood falling from enemies' body, as if great saints were relaxing after playing holi (spraying of coloured water). (1751)

The enemy troops were still not afraid of Kahna, and again attacked him with war cries. The poet Siam has stated that they were keenly looking forward to the battle again. They were standing fast (unrelenting) in their position, waiting for the master's orders, and sacrificing their valuable lives. They were fighting the enemy by coming out of their ranks with great fury. They were moving around in various directions hoping for their victory. They were not feeling terrified at heart, and they were great fans of their king. Sri Krishna was standing adamant like a rock (Sumer mountain) while the warriors closeby were falling down on the ground. (1752)

Swaiyya'

Thus Sri Krishna was encircled on this side, whereas on the other side Balram was killing the enemy ruthlessly, and they were lying dead on the ground while having their bows, arrows, and swords etc. (weapons) in their hands. He had smitten many enemies into pieces with his hoe. Many cowards were running away like mad persons. Baldev (Balram) was the victor in the battle and enemy was routed completely, fleeing away from the field and this was noticed by the Raja. (1753)

Getting shocked with this, the enemy commander told his troops, "O Warriors! Why are you running away from the battle-field, as the end of the battle is very near now. When he challenged his army, shouting like this, the troops came back by holding their weapons and they fought back fiercely with great fury. (1754)

The great warriors, who were very powerful, saw Sri Krishna advancing towards them. The poet Siam has stated that they became furious with rage and facing him, they attacked Sri Krishna that very moment. Sri Krishna had cut off the hands of some and some had lost their heads, being cut off and thrown on the ground. So some of them had given up any hopes of a victory, while some others, seeing the battle situation, gave a slip by throwing away their weapons. (1755)

Couplet

When most of the troops had fled away, then Jarasandh made another arrangement, and sent for his minister named Sumat. (1756)

He told him, "Now you proceed to the battle front with twelve faceted army with you, and the Raja gave him his weapons, protective cover, and the quiver. (1757)

While proceeding to the battle field, Sumat (minister) said, "O Raja! You listen to me! How much prowess Sri Krishna and Balram possess, as I will cause death to the god of death even?" (1758)

Saying these words to Jarasandh, the minister took many musicians with him. He launched an attack while sounding the music of Maru Raga, alongwith his twelve-faceted army. (1759)

Who else was there in the three worlds, thinking of waging a war against Sri Krishna and Balram? If anyone dared to fight with them with stubborn attitude, he would be killed in a moment (and sent to hell). (1763)

When Sri Krishna and Balram would proceed to the battle field, then none could dare to oppose them. The kings, considering him a child, though he was the Lord of the fourteen worlds (Universe) would fight against him. Who could defeat him in the battle, by whose power of Name, all the sins would be destroyed? All the people were talking among themselves, that except Jarasandh all were bound to face death without a fight. (1764)

So Balram, taking in hand his pestle, destroyed the whole army in a moment. The warriors were lying on the ground in a wounded condition, while their bodies were besmirched with blood. The poet Siam has described the beauty of their glory, thinking about it in mind, as if the anger (wrath) had taken a horrible form to watch the wonderful drama of the battle. (1766)

On one side Balram was engaged in the battle while on the other side Sri Krishna was getting furious with rage. At the same time, Sri Krishna, taking up his weapons, pushed into the forces of the enemy and destroyed the whole army by killing them. The battle was fought in such a manner, that the picture of battle was made very interesting and beautiful. There were corpses of horses, chariots, elephants and riders piled up on one another. (1767)

Some warriors were mutilated from the middle (of body) while some warriors had their heads cut off and lying there. Some were divested of their chariots at that time only, and being wounded with arrows, they were lying on the ground. Some had lost their hands, and many warriors were without their feet, which were beyond any count. The poet Siam has stated that none of them had left any patience, and all of them fled away from the battle field. (1768)

The king, who had gained victory over the armies of the world, who had never been defeated in the battles; who had kings like Indra fighting on his side, who had not retraced their steps back wards. He had been made to flee by Sri Krishna in a moment and who never could take up their bows and arrows. Thus Sri Krishna had fought such a fierce battle that the gods and demons both were all praise for him. (1769)

Couplet

When Sri Krishna had destroyed the two coloured army in the battle field, then the forces of Sumit minister launched an attack, shouting and yelling. (1770)

Swaiyya'

Then the warriors, fully enraged, attacked the enemy, having their shields against their faces and swords in their hands. The sturdy warriors came from the opposite direction and said these words. "Where was Krishna? They were striking the protective cover of Sri Krishna with their weapons including pestles, wheels and maces, which were producing flashes of lightning. It appeared as if the blacksmith was having sledge in hand and was arranging to beat the iron for proper shaping it. (1771)

By that time Burmakrit and Udhav had reached there for Krishna's help, while Akroor, alongwith many Yadavas attacked the enemy for destroying it. The poet Siam has stated that all the warriors, with their weapons were shouting "kill them, kill them". From both sides, a fierce battle was raging with maces, spears, swords and daggers. (1772)

Bramakrit had on coming, destroyed the enemy troops itself. Some warriors were lying cut into two pieces, while some others had their heads smashed and fallen on the ground. Some were streching their heavy bows and shooting arrows, which were attacking the trees for their abodes (for nights) coming down from the sky. (1773)

Some had their trunks, with swords in hands, running around the battlefield. If someone were to shout at them with a challenge then they would attack with force. Someone had fallen there with their toes cut off and were trying to get up with the support of the arms. Some arms cut away from the bodies, were fluttering like the fish out of water and churning the mud only. (1774)

The poet Ram has stated that some trunks, without any weapons, were running around in the battle-field. They were holding mighty elephant from their trunks, and were twisting them with the strength of arms. The heads of horses, lying on the ground, were being twisted with both the hands. The heads of charioteers were thrown away with one slap only. (1775)

Some warriors were jumping around in the battle field, while some others were fighting by jumping around. The poet Ram has stated that some warriors were not afraid of bows and arrows or swords even a little bit. While some cowards were running away from the battle field, with increased fear, leaving their weapons behind. Some warriors had fallen down dead while fighting again. (1776)

Sri Krishna then revolving his wheel penetrated in the enemy forces and killed many of the warriors. The poet Siam has stated that some warriors had been killed as matter of joke only, then some had been crushed by taking the mace in hand, and some had been killed by pressing hand with force. Thus Sri Krishna had brought under his control all the warriors by the dint of his force. (1777)

On the other side Balram had killed many warriors, while Sri Krishna had also killed an equal number on one side. The warriors, who had returned after winning the whole world, and had helped the Raja in distress, had been killed by Krishna and thrown down in the battle field. This scene has been praised by the poet as if the strong, wind had uprooted the plants of bananas. (1778)

There were some noble Rajas who had come to fight with Sri Krishna after leaving their houses, some of them had come riding their chariots or their elephants, while some were looking glorious riding their horses, and Sri Krishna's bravery in the form of wind had dispressed the clouds of warriors in a moment. The cowards, while running away, were saying that they had managed to save their invaluable lives (worth lakhs). (1779)

As soon as Krishna's arrows and wheel were set in motion, they would turn back their chariots in bewilderment but some mighty warriors would, due to their prestige, continue fighting with Krishna with full force. Many more high Rajas, taking orders from Jarasandh were advancing and were shouting challenges. Some mighty warriors, were keen to see Sri Krishna, as such they would join in the attack. (1780)

Then Sri Krishna, stretching his bow, shot a whole lot of arrows, which had hit many warriors, and they felt greatly aggrieved on reeling with the hitting of those arrows. Many horses had the arrows pierced into the fore legs (of horses). So the poet Ram has stated that they were being honoured as if the Muni Saal had cut off the wings of horses, which were being joined together by Sri Krishna. (1781)

Chopaiee

Then all the warriors of enemies were filled with rage, and they had surrounded Sri Krishna, who was not at all bothered (afraid of this). They fought with many weapons of different types, while shouting "Kill them" repeatedly. (1782)

Then Karodhat Singh came face to face with Sri Krishna, holding his Sword and said, challenging him "Kharag Singh had caught hold of you by the hair and when he let you go, you again took up your wheel in hand." When you were taking milk and butter from the milkmen for your consumption, have you forgotten those days? Now you are thinking of waging a war. The poet Siam has stated that Karodhat Singh had demoralised Sri Krishna with his words, piercing like arrows. (1783)

Thus listening to his words, Sri Krishna became furious with rage, and took up his Sudarshan wheel in his hand. After turning it for a while, he let it go at the enemy neck with great force which cut off his head immediately on striking and threw it on the ground. The beauty of the scene has been described by the poet Siam as if the potter had, by taking his wire, removed the earthen pot from the revolving wheel. (1784)

Then another warrior, known by the name of Satar-bidar, fought with Sri Krishna. The person, who had gained victories in the ten directions, was killed by Sri Krishna in a moment. His soul got mingled with the Prime Soul just as the light of a lamp gets merged with the light of the sun, and his soul, passing through the cosmos of the sun, went upto heavens, the Lord's abode. When Satar-bidar was killed, Sri Krishna was filled with rage. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna, leaving all his reservations and restrictions pierced into the enemy forces and fought against a Raja called Bhairav and killed him in no time. He fell down on the ground from his chariot just as a shooting star gets removed from the sky and falls on the ground. (1786)

Some warriors, draped in blood were roaming around the battle field while blood was oozing out of their wounds with gushes. Some warriors were lying on the ground, whose flesh was being taken by vultures and jackals. While their eyes were being eaten away from their faces with their beaks, while the evil spirits were jostling their intestines in the air, with their hands. (1787)

The enemy forces, full of indignation, came from all four corners, with their swords in hand. The poet Siam has stated that the warriors of Sri Krishna also attacked the enemy forces. They were attacking with their weapons like swords, bows and arrows, and sabres by challenging them. Some were fighting, some had been defeated, some had run away, and some were killed and fallen on the ground. (1788)

The warriors who had never retraced even a step backward from the battle front, who had gained victories over the enemy, had now fled away in all directions, wherever they could escape. They used to fight against the Yama (god of death) and would not relent a bit against him, were now lying dead facing upside down in the battle field being killed by the sword of Krishna, who was furious with rage. There was a great warrior, who hit an arrow at the forehead of Sri Krishna. The arrow tale was driven deep in the eyelids while the arrow had pierced through the head, coming out from the otherside. The poet Siam has stated in priase of this scene, that lot of blood was oozing out of the wound inflicted, as if Shiva had shown the light of his thrid eye while fighting with Indra in great fury. (1790)

The great warrior Sri Krishna then racing his chariot towards Balram and said, "O Balram! Do you see a huge enemy army. armed with weapons, from the southern direction, and advancing towards us. Then Balram, listening to his words, rushed and took up his hoe with great excitement and attacked the enemy. The enemy lost many warriors, and lot of blood was spilled, as if the river of Sarswati was flowing there. (1791)

The poet Siam has stated that a fierce battle was raging there, and many warriors seeing this blodd shed had fled away from the battle-field. Some wounded soldiers were roaming around there as if they had no sleep during the night, and were feeling sleepy now. Some mighty warriors were keen to engage in a fight with Sri Krishna, while some others, dropping their weapons came and asked for Krishna's pardon. (1792)

Swaiyya'

Taking their weapons, all the warriors came to launch the attack, and waged a war with Sri Krishna, while Sri Krishna, being enraged, took up his Sudarshan wheel and attacked the enemy. Many warriors were done to death and the enemy forces were routed, as if Sri Krishna in the form of a strong wind, had dispersed the clouds of enemy forces (and the enemy fled away). (1794)

Some lost their heads with the Sudarshan wheel, some others were killed with the help of the mace. The third part was frightened by seeing the enraged eyes of Krishna, while the fourth part was destroyed by slapping them with great care. Sri Krishna had pierced the chests of the enemy forces and the warriors were hit at all their limbs. So which warrior could withstand this treatment with patience and perseverance, when Krishna would attack them? (1795)

When Sri Krishna, furious with rage, would attack the enemy forces, you may ponder and decide if any warrior would dare to oppose him with patience. The poet Siam has stated that if anyone, armed with weapons tried to oppose Sri Krishna, was killed instantly. (1796)

The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna would shoot an arrow and send him to heavens, if any warrior were to attack Sri Krishna by taking up his weapons with great pride and attack him or if anyone were to shoot an arrow by stretching his bow from a distance as the enemy does not dare to face him, and challenges him from a distance. (1797)

Kabit

The poet Ram has stated that seeing their condition, the enemy warriors were getting excited with rage in their mind as if they were coming to face with their swords drawn and shouting "Kill them, kill the enemy." and then start fighting. Some are getting terrified and would not come near, though they were bearing the wounds inflicted with a smile, as if they belonged to the same clan. There were some, who were only shouting war cries, thus increasing the morale of the warriors and then engage them in actual fighting (the Kashtriya duty) and thus they proceed to heavens. (1798)

The poet Siam has stated that the warriors, who were equal in bravery to that of Sri Krishna, would come forward to face him and engage themselves in a fierce battle by taking up their weapons like arrows, bow, sword, and mace etc. and getting fully enraged. Some were lying dead on the ground and some with heads cut off, were running in the battle field. Thus there were many beautiful bodies lying dead on the ground and they were throwing the heads with their hands towards the enemy. (1799)

One warrior had killed many horses there while another warrior had killed some heavy elephants. Another mighty warrior had killed some charioteers while another warrior had killed infantry soldiers and thrown on the ground. Some warriors had fled seeing the conditions in the battle field and some wounded warriors were challenging other wounded soliders. There were some others, engaged in fighting without being afraid of Sri Krishna, but attack him rushing with a sword in hand. (1800)

Swaiyya'

When the enemy had surrounded Sri Krishna, then he took up his bow and making a thrust into enemy ranks, killed many of the enemy ranks in a moment. Then Sri Krishna waged such a fierce battle that it is indescribable (the lips become entangled with each other to describe). If anyone dared to fight, Sri Krishna did not allow him to go back alive. (1802)

On seeing most of the warriors lying dead on the battle field, some mighty warriors got furious with rage and attacked Sri Krishna with great stubborn attitude, without having the slightest fear at heart. The poet Siam has stated that all the warriors attacked by `taking up various weapons without retracting a step backwards. Sri Krishna then taking up his bow by shooting at them with one arrow each destoyed the whole lot of them. (1803)

When most of the warriors were lying dead on the ground, then the remaining warriors were greatly enraged, they shouted that who will run away from this milkmain's son, on seeing Krishna, and they shall soon kill him in the battle field. They were filled with hopes of bravery and sacrifice. But with the striking of Sri Krishna's arrows the warriors were terrified just as a sleeping person gets awoken suddenly with shock and surprise. By taking up his Sudarshan Wheel Sri Krishna gave a tough fight with great fury and destroyed the enemy force completely. The Earth felt trembled (with horrible battle), the elephants ran away towards all ten directions, and (Vishnu) the spouse of Lachhmi also woke up and Shiva's meditation posture was also disturbed. The whole army was destroyed with great strikes, and on seeing Sri Krishna the enemy forces dispersed hither and thither. The poet Siam has stated that all the great warriors had lost all hopes of any success. (1805)

There was a great loss of life in the battlefield, and the Kali (goddess) coming there was dancing (killing spree) and the warriors fled away on witnessing this furious battle. The poet Siam has described the scene that on the strike of Sri Krishna's arrows, most of the warriors would give up their lives or most of them would lose their hands, or some of them had their hands or some of them had their stomachs ripped open and were lying around and some of them, after being hit with arrows were still roaming around the battle field. Most of them had got wounded, with their clothes draped in blood, as if all of them were dressed up in red clothes. (1806)

When Sri Krishna and Balram, took up their heavy wheel on coming to the battle, then many warriors taking up their bows and arrows attacked them and some attacked using their weapons like shields, tridents maces and sabres. There was complete panic in Jarasand's forces and the mighty warriors, rushing forward, destroyed most of his army. From both sides, there was a fierce battle being fought (iron striking iron) which resulted in disturbing the meditation posture of Kamdev's enemy (Shiva) and he was shaken up. (1807)

A fierce battle was raging there, and the enemy forces were destroyed by using weapons like swords, spears, maces, daggers, and the most violent weapon (Jamdha'r). The stream of blood was flowing to the brim, where elephants, horses, chariots, heads of dead, the trunks of elephants and heads of killed warriors were washed away in the running stream. On the sight of this scene, ghosts, betal, and Bhairav got frightened and the evil spirits, with skulls in hands held upside down against their breasts, were running away from there. The poet Ram has stated that a great fierce battle was raging there as a result of which Shiva had given up his silence (meditation) and even Brahma had got frieghtened. (1808)

Swaiyya'

When Sri Krishna exhibited such a chivalorous behaviour in the battle field then one warrior from enemy ranks shouted that "Sri Krishna was very powerful, and he had not been defeated by so many (of us) who were proud of their prowess. So let us flee from the battle field, as no one had escaped death at his hands. So do not make the mistake of considering him a child, who had thrown down Kansa by holding him by his hair. (1809)

Listening to these words, all the enemy ranks were worried, the cowards had made up their mind to run away, while the warriors were filled with fury and burning with rage. So warriors full of pride, taking up their bows and arrows and swords in hand, they started fighting with the enemy. Krishna also took up his sword in hand challenging the enemy and then killing them, destroyed the whole force. (1810)

There was a state of emergency in the battle field and many warriors started fleeing from there. So Sri Krishna told Balram, "Get ready and take all the weapons you have and kill all the enemies by challenging them who dare to oppose you. Go and attack with strength without having any doubts and have no reservations in the mind. All the enemies, who were fleeing, catch hold of them with your blockage and do not kill them. (1811)

Once Balram had heard these words from Sri Krishna personally, then he took up his pestle and hoe in his hands and wearing the blocking weapon, Balram rushed after those enemies. Then the enemies, who were fleeing, were blocked by a rope around their neck and tied their hands, while some were killed fighting in the battle field, and some were sent alive to the jail, being tied together. (1812)

The warriors of Sri Krishna then chased the fleeing enemy forces. Whosoever fought against them, was killed in action, and allowed others to go who accepted their defeat. The enemy forces, which never had retraced their steps in battle, were made to retract backwards by Balram with force. They had run away like mad people, while their swords and daggers had fallen from their hands. (1813)

The warriors, who were still left fighting in the battle field, became furious with rage and attacked the place. On seeing them approaching the soldiers, Sri Krishna took hold of their weapons like swords, wheels, maces, spears with golden handle, axes. They were not frightened a bit, and all the warriors shouting war cries for the victory of Sri Krishna had launched an attack on enemy with a thunder. The poet Siam has stated warriors from both sidess were fighting to gain an entry into the heavens. (1814)

Then from this side the Yadava warriors jointly launched an attack and came face to face with the enemy. Then on coming there they were shouting challenges and then striking at the enemy. Some of them had died while some others were heaving sighs, while some others got wounded and were throbing in agony. It appeared as if drug addicts had consumed lot of hemp (Bhang) and were lying in the arena. (1815)

Kabit

To serve their master, the warriors were standing firm in the battle field, and would not retrace a single step from facing the enemy. They were engrossed in the fighting with their morale rising high and taking their swords, spears and bows and arrows and being very steady and concentrating on their action, they were fighting. Those warriors who were falling down, would cross the worldly ocean of sorrows and were reaching the heavens after crossing the solar system. The poet Siam has stated that their souls were pushing forward in such a manner, just as a person climbs a stair case. (1816)

Swaiyya'

With the battle progressing, the warriors were becoming furious with rage, and were viewing the enemy (with disdain) having their weapons of spears, bows and arrows, swords, maces, axes, tridents, etc. in their hands. Then they would attack the enemy and the mighty warriors bore the brunt of the arrows on the body, but would not step backwards. The human bodies, in mutilated condition, were lying down on the ground in the battle-field and they were not showing off their agony of heart at all or saying it, with out heaving a sigh of sorrow or pain. All the warriors, who had come to the battle-field, were fighting with rage and were not running away out of fear. They would expose their bodies to the enemy attacks, having their weapons in hands, and would not hesitate in sacrificing their lives. The warriors, who had laid down their lives in fighting against the enemy, were going to heavens according to the poet Siam. They were saying these words from their lips that they were very fortunate in having gone to heavens. (1818)

There were some warriors in the battle field, who had fought with courage against the enemy and were now lying on the ground. According to the poet Siam there were some other warriors, who were fighting with fury, having seen the plight of their comrades. They were attacking the enemy by holding their weapons and by challenging the enemy and were opposing Sri Krishna himself without any hesitation. They were fighting, casting away all doubts (about the consequences) and finally were killed in the battle field. They were wedded by the fairies immediately (and taken to heavens). (1819)

Some had fought bravely, while some others, having seen the battle situation, had got frightened. They had asked their charioteers to rush their chariots to the front they had stood firmly in the battle front. They had fought well with their weapons like swords and scabbards, without harbouring any fear in their hearts in the battle field. The poet Siam has stated that they were shouting "Kill him, kill him." and were not retracting at all. (1820)

When such warriors were coming to oppose Sri Krishna they would take up their weapons and then seeing Krishna they would take up their weapons and attack the enemy force. Some warriors were trampled with feet, some others were thrown on the ground by using some clever (moves) manoeuvers. Then at that time many warriors got killed in the battle field. (1821)

Some warriors on being wounded, had laid down their lives (and gone to Yama's place). The poet Siam has stated that some beautiful bodies (of warriors) were seen completely draped in blood, while some (headless) trunks were roaming around the battle field, whose heads had been cutt off by Sri Krishna. Some other warriors, out of fear, had fled the battle field and gone to meet Raja Jarasansh (for directions). (1822)

All those warriors, who had fled from the battle field jointly went to the Raja with the request, "O Raja! All the warriors, whom you had sent, had attacked Sri Krishna, taking up their weapons, but none of them could gain victory against him and we also had fought with great strength against him but finally gave up, being defeated as Krishna had killed all those warriors by taking up his bow and arrows, and none could save himself. (1823)

The warriors spoke to Raja Jarasandh like this. "O Master! Pray listen to our request. You should leave this battle front to your ministers to continue fighting, while you may proceed back to palace and give a comfortable life to the town. Sofar we have been able to maintain our prestige (as the battle was equally balanced) and most of the selected warriors had not been killed. The poet Siam has stated that (these warriors told the Raja) there was no chance of winning this battle against Shiam (Krishna), not even in the dreams. (1824)

Raja Jarashandh got furious with rage and spoke like this. "I will send all the warriors of Sri Krishna to Yama's place (by killing them)." (1825)

Swaiyya'

"So what if Indra was very powerful. Today I will fight against him. Even the sun called himself very powerful with great splendour (effulgence). I will kill him also, sending him to the Yama's abode. Moreover Shiva was called mighty (god) but with increased wrathfulness, I will destroy him also. I possess so much strenght, and being a king, why should I run away from fighting a milkman (Krishna)?" (Jarasandh thought to himself). (1826)

Thus the Raja developed a great rage in his heart and sent for his multi-coloured army. All of them came with their weapons, to wage a war against Sri Krishna. With his canopy spread over his head, the Raja followed in the rear of his army, while sending his whole army ahead of him. It appeared as if during the monsoon period (rainy season) dark clouds had gathered together and were thundering aloud. (1827)

The Raja then said to Krishna-

Couplet

Raja Jarasandh on perceiving Sri Krishna, told him loudly, "Being a milkman you dare to fight against the Kashtriyas? (1828).

Swaiyya'

Krishna said, "You call yourself a Kashatriya, but when I wage a war against you, you will run away straightaway". "I shall watch your patience only then, when you will be in trouble, and I will shoot an arrow. You will fall down unconscious on the ground and will not be able to balance yourself in the chariot. With the striking of one arrow alone, you will be despatched to the heavens." (1829)

When Sri Krishna uttered these words, then Raja became furious with rage. Ordering his charioteer, he raced his chariot towards Sri Krishna and shot an arrow of red colour by stretching his bow. It appreared as if Krishna was riding a Garuda (like Vishnu) and for hiding himself, the Tachhak cobra was running away (to save himself). (1830)

On seeing the oncoming arrow Krishna took up his weapons and stretching his bow shot an arrow, which had black wings attached to it. Raja Jarasandh took up his shield and those arrows hit the shield, which could not be taken out. It appeared as if to swallow the sun, Rahu's transport (black vulture) had spread its wings. (1831)

On viewing Sri Krishna shooting arrows at him, the Raja had taken up his bow and shot arrows pointing at him. With the strength of the Raja, the arrows were being shot with such a force, whose beauty has been depicted by the peot Siam, as if the arrows in the form of raindrops from clouds, were pouring on Sri Krishna. It appeared as if Krishna not only a warrior but was a fire, to enjoy its flame. (1832)

Sri Krishan was cutting down all the arrows, being shot by the Raja. The arrows were being cut in the middle of the blade and the tail-end in no time by him. The pieces of the arrows were lying scattered on the ground as if the farmer had removed the seeds of the sugar-cane. However the arrows of Sri Krishna were like the hawk, which had killed the brids like arrows of the enemy. (1833)

Then Balram, with Sword in hand, was advancing killing horses, elephants, chariot borne and infantry troops on the way. The front line soldiers were made to flee by killing them and the Raja managed to escape from being encircled in a ring. The charioteers were divested of their chariots, while some others were wounded badly. The poet Siam has stated that Balram had shown his exemplary prowess to all the warriors. (1835)

Now Balram, furious with rage, and taking up a horrible form in the battle field, was wielding his sword. He was moving around the battle field with great pride and would not care for anyone else. He was completely engrossed in the fighting mood. The poet Siam has stated that it appeared he was drunk (having consumed liquor). Balram was thus killing the enemy as if he had taken the horrible form of (Yama) god of death. (1836)

Those enemy warriors, with their heads cut off, were becoming furious with rage. Some had lost their hands or feet, while many of them had been wounded badly (bodily). Those of them, who called themselves very powerful, had fled away from their positions. The bodies of warriors were pierced with arrows, as if they had taken up the form of a percupine. (1837)

So on this side Balram was ruthless in the battle field, while on the other side Krishna was greatly enraged. Whosoever came to oppose him, was shot dead with the striking of a single arrow. All the forces of the Raja had been sent to hell (killed) in no time. So none of the enemy warriors had any patience left in mind, and all had fled away, when Sri Krishna had waged such a war in the battle field. (1838)

The warriors who were worried about their prestige, got very furious with rage, as they considered this task as that of their master. Thy forgot about any doubts or reservations in the mind and came forward with the beat of drums. Then Sri Krishna, taking his bow in hand, shot many arrows with great strength. The poet Siam has stated that with one arrow for each, all the mighty warriors were shot dead by Sri Krishna. (1839)

Chopaiee

Krishna had destroyed the whole army of Jarasandh alongwith his pride and egoistic tendency which was equally subdued. Now the Raja was wondering as to what further steps could be taken? Should he die fighting in the battle field? (1840)

After pondering over it in his mind for sometime, he took up his bow and was keen to start fighting afresh with Sri Krishna. He came with all his protective cover in front of Krishna. The poet Siam has stated that he had developed more ruthlessness in mind. (1841)

Jarasandh then placed the arrow on his bow and with tilted brows addresed Sri Krishna like this, as stated by the poet Siam. (1842)

Raja Jarasandh addresad Krishna like this -

Swaiyya'

"O Son of Nand! If you are truely powerful, then give me an exhibition of your prowess. What are you looking at me, for? I am going to shoot the arrow, now do not try to run away. O milkman! Either you surrender by throwing down your weapons or you come forward and start fighting a battle against me by taking up your arms. Why do you want to lose your life in the battle field? Instead you go to the jungle and take your cows and calves for grazing in the jungle. (1843)

The poet has described the state of mind of Sri Krishna. When he heard such words from the Raja, then he became so much furious with rage, as a spoon of ghee thrown into fire, causes the fire to be inflamed strongly. Just as a lion roars on hearing the sound of the jackal, Sri Krishna's mind was agitated similarly with vehemence. The words of the enemy were piercing to (annoying) Sri Krishna, just as a corn gives irritation to the mind on piercing one's feet. (1844)

So on this side, Sri Krishna being enraged, shot so many arrows by pointing at the Raja. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja also got furious with rage and took up his bow with both eyes enraged and tilted. All the arrows, shot by the Raja at Sri Krishna, were cut down by him in no time and thrown away in pieces. Even Sri Krishna's arrows did not touch the body of Jarasandh at all. (1845)

On one side, the Raja was engaged in battle against Sri Krishna, and on the other side, Balram taunted him with these words, "many warriors of yours have been killed, but you have not felt any shame (in mind) at this! O Raja! Why do you feel you cannot be killed in battle? go back to your home, what have you gained by fighting so far? O Raja! You are a great fool, as you are like a deer and you have come to win this battle against the lion, Sri Krishna!" (1846)

Couplet

"All the warriors on whose support you are fighting this battle, have all fled away from the battle field. O fool! Now either you also die fighting or seek pardon from Sri Krishna or run away!" (1847)

Raja Jarasandh then replied to Balram.

After saying this, the Raja was filled with rage and immediately shot an arrow at Balram. On its strike, Balram was rolling badly (on the ground) and felt great body pain and fell down unconscious in the chariot. The beauty of this has been described by the poet Siam as if the arrow, in the form of a snake had bitten Balram, so that he forgot all about his wealth and home (from the mind). (1849)

When Balram regained consciousness, he was furious with rage, on seeing the enemy and taking his heavy mace, he came to the battle field to kill Raja Jarasandh. The poet Siam has stated that Balram got down from his chariot and started walking on foot; No other warrior really knew where was he going, but the Raja had realized it. (1850)

On seeing Balram approaching him, the Raja became furious with rage, and came face to face with Balram holding his bow in hand. The mace like lightning, which was brought by Balram, was cut into two pieces by striking one arrow only by the Raja. It appears that the hopes of Balram of killing the enemy were dashed to the ground. (1851)

When the Raja had broken the mace like this, then Balram took up his shield and sword. He rushed towards the Raja without having any doubts in mind. The Raja, on seeing Balram coming towards him, thundered like the clouds and shot many arrows like a shower of rain. He broke his shield into seven pieces and the sword into three pieces. (1852)

When the shield was broken, the swrod was cut, then Sri Krishna saw Balram in that predicament and thought to himself that the Raja would now kill Balram in no time. Then Sri Krishna took up his Sudarshan wheel and rushed with fill strength to wage war against the Raja. The poet Ram has stated that Sri Krishna then challenged him, "O Raja! You come and fight with me!" (1853)

Then on hearing such words in the battle field, the Raja advanced towards Sri Krishna for fighting against him. Then getting enraged and with the strength of hand stretched his bow He had worn a heavy coat of iron (protective cover) on his body; and this caused the poet to state that as if during the battle, getting furious with rage, Ravana had attacked Ram. When the Raja was confronting Sri Krishna, then Shiam (Krishna) took up his bow and rushed to face him squarely, without having any fear at heart. By stretching his bow upto the ears, he shot an arrow at the canopy of the enemy. The canopy crashed onto the ground in pieces. It appeared as if Rahu (demon) had destroyed the moon by killing it. (1855)

When the Raja's canopy (overhead) was gone, he became very furious with rage and saw with a crooked eye towards Sri Krishna, holding his heavy bow in hand. He was trying to pull it (stretch) but failed to do and his hands started trembling. That moment Sri Krishna, taking his bow and arrows, cut his bow and threw it down. (1856)

When Sri Krishna had cut the Raja's (Jarasandh) bow, he got very agitated with rage, and wielding his sword with great force, challenged Krishna and attacked the enemy ranks. Then the shields crossed the sheilds and the swords were clattering against swords so fiercely as if the jungle fire was spreading fast to burn the enemy force like straw and throwing it down with force. Many warriors were wounded and were moving around, and some others draped in blood, were roaring, while some headless trunks were also moving around and the cowards were yelling on seeing them. Some warriors were fleeing from the battle field, while some others were engrossed in fighting the battle against the enemy. Some were lying dead on the ground, as if drunken persons, having consumed liquor, were lying in sleep. (1858)

The Yadavas, who were greatly enraged, were attacking Jarasandh with their weapons, and all other warriors (in charge) were shouting wielding their swords. The Raja, wielding his bow, shot many arrows in great pride at the enemy. With one arrow alone, he made many warriors headless and these great lords became helpless in no time. (1859)

Some warriors had lost their arms, while some had got their heads cut off and then shot some arrows at Sri Krishna. Many grand elephants had been killed, and had thrown some beautifully decorated horses onto the ground. Then evil spirits, ghosts and jackals etc. had a fill of the blood flowing there (bathed in blood). (1860)

Having killed many warriors of Sri Krishna, the Raja was furious with rage and had given up his life even at the altar of the battle, having lost any sense of his body (for its safety) being engrossed in battle fully. The whole army of Sri Krishna was lying dead on the ground. It appeared the Raja had recovered the fine from him in the form of the heads of his warriors. (1861)

The poet through a narrative, has stated that the Raja had let go those warriors, considered by him as truthful, while killing only those considered as based on falsehood by him; as he did not like falsehood at all. The warriors lying wounded on the battlefield must have committed some acts of falsehood or committed some mistakes and were punished by him. Some had lost their hands or feet. Whatever one had done, had reaped the fruit of his own actions. The Raja (Jarasandh) had, sitting on the throne into his chariot, had decided these cases of warriors (judgement given by him). (1862)

When the Raja fought like this Sri Krishna got furious with rage, and going in front of him, fought a battle, without having any hfear at heart. Sri Krishna shot an arrow which struck the Raja in his chest and he fell on the ground. The arrow had tasted the marrow in his bones, just as a snake had taken the milk. (1863)

Having borne the brunt of this arrow, the Raja then shot an arrow at Sri Krishna and another arrow was shot at his charioteer, which caused great agony to him. He was about to fall, as it was difficult for him to balance himself in the chariot (due to pain) but the horses proved their cleverness by taking away the chariot from the field. (1864)

Couplet

The persevering Sri Krishna, by holding the charioteer from the arms, made him lie in the chariot, and driving the chariot himself continued to fight. (1865)

By not seeing the charioteer on the chariot of Sri Krishna, Balram became very furious and spoke to Jarasandh loudly, "Just as we had won over your whole army, we will sound the drums of victory after winning against you as well. The fool fighting against the Lord (Master) of the whole Universe (fourteen worlds) calls himself a Raja." It appeared as if a moth, flying with wings, wanted to fly with the hawks." (1866).

O Jarasandh! The Lord of the whole Universe could still leave you alive, if you were to stop fighting with him. Consider in your mind something of real knowlege, leaving the talk of ignorance from your mind. Sri Krishna was the saviour of all. "The poet Siam has stated." Take it from me and ponder over it in your mind, and leaving aside all your weapons, you better seek pardon from Sri Krishna by paying obeisance at his lotus-feet." (1867)

Chopaiee

When Balram spoke like this, the Raja looked at Balram with great indignation. The Raja said, "I will kill all of you right now." Being a Kashatriya should I stop fighting against a milkman?" (1868)

Swaiyya'

On hearing such words of the Raja, all the Yadava warriors became furious with rage and launched an attack leaving all doubts or reservations, viewing the enemy with disdain, without harbouring any fear at heart. Raja Jarasandh, taking up his bow, had cut down many heads from the body with his arrows, which were fallen on the ground. It appeared as if with a gust of wind many flowers had broken off from the creepers and fallen on ground. (1869)

Raja Jarasandh went on a killing spree, thus killing the enemy force, without caring for any warrior (without giving them any importance). Many horses, and great elephants, draped in blood, from head to foot, where lying there, and many charioteers had also been killed. Those warriors, who had come tying ribbons on hands, had been killed in many ways. The limbs of warriors were lying scattered all over the battle-field. It appeared as if the farmer had sown some seeds on the fields. (1870)

On seeing such a situation against themselves Balram said to Sri Krishna angrily, and both of them went ahead by directing their charioteers, facing the enemy in the battle field. They were both like a flame of fire, armed with various weapons and protective coats of mail. The poet Siam has stated that they launched an attack just as two lions had pounced upon a deer. (1871)

Then Sri Krishna, getting enraged and taking up his bow, shot many arrows, thus inflicting many wounds on the body of the Raja. The poet Ram has stated, that he killed all the four horses (of the chariot) with four arrows and cut the chariot of the Raja into pieces and with great fury cut down his bow also. Then Jarasandh, on foot, taking up his mace, fought bravely by confonting Sri Krishna, which I am going to describe now. (1872)

Then the Raja, rushing forward on foot only and with his mace attacked Balram, thus wounding him and he gave an exhibition of the fury stored within himself to all the warriors there. Then Balram also jumped out of his chariot and stood on the ground. The beauty of the scene has been described by the poet that he had destroyed the chariots including the four horses and charioteer. (1873)

On one side was the Raja with his mace, while from the other side, Balram came forward with his mace. The poet Siam has stated that both of them fought a fierce and dreadful battle in the battle field. They fought for a long time but neither anyone fell down himself nor could make the other fall down, thus both had pleased the gods equally and delighted the persevering warriors also. (1874)

Then both the warriors got tired and sat down, and then stood fighting again. None of them had any doubts rather they were shouting to kill the enemy. Both fought as per the rules of mace-fighting, thus attacking each other. No one retraced a step from the battle field, and were conforting each other with, stubbornness, while saving the other's attack with mace. (1875)

The poet Siam has stated that the Raja and Balram were both fully enraged, and ever challenging each other, without having the slightest fear in mind. Holding their heavy maces, they would not step back in the battle field. It seemed as if two lions were fighting to take away the flesh in a great forest. (1876)

Then Balram broke the mace of the Raja, cutting it in two pieces and shot many arrows and spoke to the enemy with great fury. "You came to fight with your manliness against us. Saying this he shot some more arrows and taking his bow, put it across his head. The gods were praising him for this act and were saying that Sri Krishna had won and the great enemy (Jarasandh) was defeated. (1877)

The Raja, from whom Grauda and Shiva used to tremble and the Munis were also afraid of him, and even Sheshnag, Varuna, the sun and moon including Indra were always worried about his attack; according to the poet Siam, Balram had come as a god of death for the Raja Jarasandh standing over his head. All the warriors were praising (Balram) saying that the Lord had defeated a great enemy. (1878)

Then Balram, holding his mace, shouted with rage, "I will soon kill the enemy." How could he save himself from me? I will not be terrified even if he fought like Yama. O Brother! If Krishna alongwith all the Yadvas were to ask me to pardon him, even then I shall not let him go and get deterred from my determination. The poet Siam has stated that Balram said, "I shall kill him soon. (1879)

On hearing Balram's words, the Raja was terror-stricken in his mind. He saw in Balram the Yama, god of death. So leaving aside his weapons, he clasped the feet of Sri Krishna. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja said, "O Lord! May you help me now;" and was requesting him badly. (1880)

The ocean of munificence, Sri Krishna, seeing his plight, felt greatly moved and forgot about his anger and water flowed from both his eyes. Then he spoke to Balram, "O Balram! Leave him alone and let him go." We have gained victory against him, who had come to win us over, and he was now wailing and crying. (1881)

If you have gained victory, so what? Then Balram said, "O Krishna! He is our greatest enemy and now is powerless. "Then Sri Krishna said, "One good thing about him is that he is an expert charioteer, and is now without a c ariot and is saying, "O Master! I am lying at your feet. If he were a master of a great army once, so what, as now you have destroyed all his army." (1882)

In the end Sri Krishna handed over to Jarasandh a turban, and some clothes and left him free, giving a chariot also. Raja Jarasandh was meditating on Sri Krishna in his heart and felt ashamed of himself. Bowing a little, feeling greatly hurt, and repentant he went back home. The poet Siam has stated the praises of Sri Krishna spread far and wide (through out the fourteen worlds). (1884)

Sri Krishna had routed the varied army of the Raja many a time, in the battle field. Many horses and large elephants had also been killed. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja's existence was completely dishonoured (removing his fame) with the striking of one arrow alone, of Sri Krishna, all the troops had been killed (sent to Yama). Sri Krishna had won the battle and Raja Jarasandh was defeated twenty three times. (1885)

Couplet

The praises of Sri Krishna were sung by the gods, which has been described earlier already. Now the episode of coming events is, detailed in a beautiful manner. (1886)

Swaiyya'

On one side the Raja, after his defeat, went back home, while Sri Krishna returned home, after winning the battle. At first he paid obeisance to his parents, and then a canopy was organised over the head of Raja Ugarsain. Then coming out of their houses, gave many things (gifts) in charity, to talented persons. Who sang the praises of Sri Krishna like this. "Sri Krishna was the most valiant and greatest persevering warrior, who had gained everyone's praise by winning in battle. (1887)

All the women of the town, Mathura were looking at Sri Krishna, and they were sacrificing all the ornaments clothes and money they had, over Sri Krishna, and were saying the following words with a laugh, that they had won a great enemy in the battle. "The way you appear beautiful you are equally a great warrior. By saying so, they all had brought an end to the grief. (1888)

The women of the town, viewing Sri Krishna and with tilted eyes (bewitching) had uttered these words. "By fighting a heroic battle against the enemy and then winning the battle, you have come back home". When they said unhesitatingly, "O Lord! The way you used to joke with Radhika, please try to play with us in the same manner (smile with us also)." (1889)

When the (town) women folk of the town said such words, then Sri Krishna looked at them with pleasure (with a smile). By glancing at them with a lovable sight, all their doubts and misgivings were removed. The poet Siam has stated that the women, being enamoured by him, fell down on the ground, feeling dizzy, as if Sri Krishna's brows were like the bow, and he had shot arrows of his bewitching glances at them. So on one side, the women, with a sense of hesitation, went back home, and on the other side, Sri Krishna came to the assembly of warriors. On seeing Sri Krishna approaching, the Raja Ugarsain rushed and bowed (his head) at the his feet. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja took Sri Krishna with great honour and made him sit on the throne beside himself. Then he served water and liquor to Krishna, which made him laugh to look at them. (1891)

When all the women were completely overpowered with the liquor (consuming liquor), then Balram told the Raja that Sri Krishna had killed the horses of Jarasandh army and even great elephants had not been spared (from killing). Whosoever was shot at with an arrow, was divested of his life immediately. By hurling praises (among the warriors) at Sri Krishna, Balram had related the heroic battles fought by him and the way he had fought there. (1892)

In the whole assembly Balram said these words to Sri Krishna, while his eyes were red with the intoxication of liquor. (1893)

"I have been given less quantity of liquor, while others had much more and then told them these words, (by Balram)," To fight, then giving up life in the battle, and wage a war were the functions of honour of the Kahatriyas'. The poet Siam has stated that Bhrigu had defamed the liquor by relating the episode of Kach (son of Braspat), while the poet Ram has stated that the gods had gained this essence (enjoyment) from Brahma only. (1894)

Couplet

The enjoyment, which Sri Krishna had bestowed on us, could not be given by anyone else. He had gained victories, against such enemies, at whose door Indra (god) was performing sentry duties (Indra was even slave to them). (1895)

Krishna had never spoken harsh words to anyone in a rage, and if someone had made a mistake, he would only laugh at it. he had never punished anyone with fines or punishment, and after killing an enemy, had never usurped his wealth. In the battle field he had never spared any enemy to go back alive, as Sri Krishna had vowed for such acts and functions only." (1896)

The poet Siam has stated that there was never so much "enjoyment of peace" on the Earth, even during the tenure of Raja Nal or even when the demon Mur was killed and sent to hell, or the bliss gained during the reign of Harnakush and his brother or the bliss enjoyed by the Raja Prithu during his dreams but during the victory gained by Sri Krishna such a bliss had been expressed by the Earth." (1897)

The dark clouds joining together cause a loud thunder, and nothing else makes such a noise. The warriors take up their weapons, whereas no other person nomrally holds weapons like this on his body. On Sri Krishna's abode there were always drum beats of war, just as, except on the occasion of marriage, such drums are not sounded at any household. Now there are no sins being committed anywhere as righteous deeds are being practised everywhere (religious functions). (1898)

O Sun! O Moon! O Benevolent Lord! Now listen to my prayer (request) with full attention! I do not seek anything else from you. Whatever I have thought of, the same hopes of mine be fulfilled, O Lord! So that I may die fighting in a righteous (course) war with my weapons. I am telling this truth, pray believe me. O Lord Mother, the Saviour of Saints! May you bestow the same gift (blessing) to this poet (Siam) through Your Grace! (1900)

If I were to seek (hope for) wealth, then the wealth is pouring in from all the countries (directions) and I am not at all interested in any other occult powers as I have no (greed) desire for them, Moreover, listen to me, if there was anything worth then why should anyone bear so much suffering on the body? O Lord! Therefore the poet Siam seeks only this blessing from you that he may die fighting, in the war for a virtuous cause, but without harbouring any fear at heart. (1901)

"The whole world was singing the praises of Sri Krishna and till now people sing his praises. The Sidhas, Munis (Ascetic), Shiva, Brahma Bal (Raja) and Viyas, all were singing his praises till to date. None, including Aire, Prashar, Narad, Sharda, Lachhmi, Sukdev, Sheshnag, had been able to find the limits of the limitless Lord. The poet Siam has described his praises in this poetry form. But which poet could placate him by describing his greatness like this?" (1902)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar, dealing with the episode of the battles of Raja Jarasandh and then leaving him scotfree after capturing him from the Bachittar Natak Granth is completed. Now the episode of the Return of Jarasandh alongwith Kal Jaman begins.

Swaiyya'

Raja Jarasandh was greatly pained and felt aggrieved, so he wrote a letter to his friend, Kaal Jamana and despatched it, saying that Krishna had killed his, whole army and through his (Krishna's) grace, he had been left-free (left off alive). So now on receipt of this letter, you better come this, side by calling your whole army alongwith. So on hearing the predicament of his friend, Kaal Jaman rushed with his forces. (1903)

Ka'l Jaman had gathered so much force with him, that it is rather impossible to detail its full strenght. If we were to call one praticular warrior, then many millions of warriors would answer the call. Millions of drums were beating, due to which the warriors sound could not be heard. Kal Jaman, on collecting together such a huge army, said, 'Now there is no need to delay even for a moment, but let us move fast to wage a war against Krishna." (1904)

The commander of Kal Jaman forces came with such a huge force, so powerful and large, that it was rather impossible to give exact figures (to count them), though it might be possible to count the tree leaves in the forest. (1905)

Swaiyya'

Where the army was camping, the urination of horses from the forces, would cause a stream like flow. The enemy would be terrified on hearing the neighing of the horses or when they were marching ahead. The malechhas (demons) of Kal Jaman army were talking in persian and would not retrace a step backwards in the battle field. They were saying "Let us see Sri Krishna at first, so that he could be despatched to hell with one arrow alone. (1906)

From the one side, countless malechhas (demons) getting furious, had launched an attack and from the other side, Jarasandh, alongwith a huge army was advancing. No one could make an estimate or guess of the strength of enemy troops, though one could easily count the leaves in the jungle. Krishna was consuming liquor, when his emissaries gave the news about the arrival of Kal Jamna. If there was someone else (apart from Krishna) he would have given up his life even due to the fear (of enemy) but here Krishna, on getting this news, felt greatly relieved and delighted. (1907)

So on one side the malechhas, being enraged, had attaked in great strength, and from the other side, Jarasandh had also come with a huge force (of troops). Many huge elephants, elegantly decorated, were moving forward, as if dark clouds had arrived in strength. They had surrounded Krishna and Balram both, in Mathura alone. The beauty of the scene has been depicted by the poet Siam, as if many warriors had encircled two lions, (like) with the help of barbed wire. (1908)

Krishna and Balram, both got themselves armed with many weapons and became very furious with rage. The poet Siam has stated that both the brothers advanced towards the army of malechhas and killed many warriors immediately on arrival there, many were wounded, and many had been thrown on the ground. They were not bothered about their own safety at all, and they dealt with the enemy, killing most of them. (1909)

Many warriors had fallen on the ground being wounded and many were lying dead also. Some with the mutilated feet or hands were lying and at some places their dead bodies were lying. Many warriors had, due to fear, run away from the battle field. Thus Sri Krishna was victorious and the malechhas were defeated in this manner. (1910)

Krishna had killed many warriors like Wahid Khan, Furjileh Khan and Nijabat Khan, and Jahad Khan and Laftuleh Khan had been cut into pieces. Moreover Balram had killed with his mace warriors like Himmat Khan and Jaffarkhan etc. Thus it was a victory for Sri Krishna and the whole army of muslims was wiped out. (1911)

These noble men (known warriors) were killed by Sri Krishna and being enraged, had killed most of the army. Whosoever came to attack him, was not allowed to go back alive. Krishna had emerged with greater splendour just as the sun at noon is at its full glory and heat. Many flocks of malechhas had fled away from the battle field. No one dared to face Sri Krishna and fight against him. (1912)

Sri Krishna fought so bravely that no malechh dared to oppose him. Viewing the situation Kal Jaman sent another huge army of millions to fight. They managed to fight for sometime, but could not withstand Krishna's onslaughts any longer and were killed finally. All the gods were delighted and were all praise for the way Krishna had fought the war. (1913)

Many Yadavas, arming themselves with weapons, and being furious with rage, were proceeding to the battle field for fighting against warriors of their own choice and calibre with great joy. They fought ferociously and were not retracing at all and such warriors were shouting, "Kill them, kill them" and were fighting bravely. With the swords striking, their heads were being chopped off and sometime the bodies were falling down on the ground. (1914)

When Sri Krishna fought with his weapons so bravely in the battle field, the clothes of enemy warriors became red coloured (with blood) as if Brahma had created a special red coloured world. On seeing this horrible battle, Shiva had danced with his matted hair (let loose) dishevelled. The poet Siam has stated that not a single soldier was left alive out of the whole army. (1915)

All the forces, which Kal Jaman had brought alongwith him, had been killed and not a single worrior was left alive. Then Kal Jaman himself came to fight, having picked up enough courage. (1916)

Do not try to delay it and come out with pleasure, so that we could bring this battle to a finish. (1917)

On hearing such words of Kal Jaman Sri Krishna moved towards him. Being furious with rage, he looked at him and then shot his gun at him. At firts he killed the charioteer, and then killed all the four horses (of the chariot). The poet Siam has stated that he cut into pieces all the weapons that he had on his person. (1918)

Sri Krishna then thought to himself that may be the malechha would start fighting with fists. The poet Siam has stated that (Krishna felt) (that) "this man may not cause this body to become impure with his touch while fighting with fists. He had covered his whole body with protective cover alongwith other weapons, then I may not be able to kill him even with the help of the whole army. If I were to cut off his head even, then since he was without weapons, my strength could come to naught (may not be destroyed). (1920)

Sri K rishna thought in his mind that if he were to run away, then he (Kal Jaman) would try to follow me. So I should run for a short distance without allowing him (malechha) to touch my body. Then going into the cave of Muchkund, where he was sleeping, I should wake him up. Saving myself from his view, I should get him burnt through his eyes sighting him. (1921)

He also thought in his mind that if he were to kill him, then he would go to heavens, and if he was burnt in fire, then his religion of malechha would be destroyed (as a result of that he would go to hell). (1922)

So leaving his chariot, and dropping his weapons, Sri Krishna started running away, as if he was in great panic (fear) so Kal Jaman thought, he had been frightened so he was running away. He thought to himself that being the Raja of Mathura, he had run away. Sri Krishna went to the cave where Muchkund was sleeping and made him wake up. Kal Jaman was following him (Krishna), so he hurled a curse at him. (1923)

By the time Sri Krishna came back to his camp, one person came and gave the message, saying "O Krishna! Where are you going to your camp (abode) as Raja Jarasandh had launched an attack. Listening to this person's talk, the warriors were filled with fear. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna and Balram were filled with joy and tranquillity of mind. (1926)

Then Raja Ugarsain said, "That Raja Jarasandh had attacked them with a huge force, and was getting furious with rage, so what sould be done? He had brought a huge force with him. There was a great mountain, where they took shelter for sometime and felt greatly relieved (at peace). Then Jarasandh had encircled this mountain. On hearing their talk, Sri Krishna then crushed the mountain undernealth his feet. The poet Siam has stated that the mountain could not bear the weight of his feet, so it got pushed into water beneath it, due to his weight. On being immersed in water, the mountain again jumped upwards and came out of water. As a result of this, the fire could not burn anyone (being). Then Sri Krishna and Balram jumped into the fray, and attacked the enemy forces. Their heart was not affected (did not tremble) due to fear of the enemy strength. (1937)

Then, holding his mace in hand, Sri Krishna killed many of the warriors of Jarasandh, alongwith many horse riders and also killed many elephants, thus throwing them on the ground. Many columns of infantry had been washed out. Also many charioteers were divested of their chariots by breaking them into pieces. So Sri Krishna had gained victory in the battle, the poet Siam has stated that all the enemies were defeated. (1938)

The warrior, who used to come forward for fighting against Sri Krishna, would fight bravely as he was not a coward. The poet Siam has stated that in the presence of Krishna's power (splendour), no warriors could face him with perseverance. Viewing their condition, Raja Ugarsain had remearked that a fierce battle was going on. It appeared as if Raja Jarasandh was like a betel trader and in the form of warriors, was distributing betel nuts to various people. (1939)

On the other front Balram, taking his mace and getting enraged had decimated the enemy ranks fully. The warriors, who chose to fight with him by confronting him, had their heads smashed by one strike (or slap) only. The rest of the multi-coloured army was also dealt with severely (punished badly). He had won victory over all the enemies and none was left undefeated. (1940)

When both brothers, Krishna and Balram jointly had killed all the troops of Raja Jarasandh, then only he was left alive, who had lost courage and accepted defeat. When the whole army was in such a bad shape, the Raja had realized this position by seeing personally. He had given up all hopes of victory or even being alive, and tried to pick up courage with obstinacy. (1941)

On gaining consciousness, Raja Jarasandh was feeling distressed out of fear, and dropping all his weapons, (placed) bowed his head at the feet of Sri Krishna, and said, "O Lord! Do not kill me. I had not realized your power and thus made this blunder." The Raja was clamouring for mercy and said, "I am under your protection now." The poet Siam has stated that seeing this pitiable condition of the Raja, the benevolent Lord (Sri Krishna) felt pity on him and had a feeling of modesty. (1946)

Then Krishna told Balram -

On hearing about the victory of Sri Krishna, all the Yadavas were moving around with joy and pride, but about the Raja being let off by him was not liked by them and they nodded their heads, saying that this was very bad on his part. (1952)

Swaiyya'

"O Krishna! You have behaved childishly (like in-experienced boys). Such an enemy, most powerful, was in your clutches. Previously you had let him go through your mercy, but he had forced you to leave the town, and you had been rewarded for you kindness. O Krishna! Even an (illiterate) in experienced person would not act like this, as you have behaved. "Saying this, they would nod their head (shake it in displeasure). "Now you had not let him off, but had invited (sent) him to come back with a greater force again to attack us." (1953)

Some would say, "Let us go to Mathura while some others would say that the Raja was coming back with a great army." The poet Siam has stated (that the Yadavas were pondering) who would dare to oppose him like a warrior? If someone were to fight against him through obstinacy or perseverance, then he would not be able to (win) gain victory against him. So it is not worthwhile going back to the town. Whatever has been written by the Lord in our luck, has to happen! (nothing could be done now). (1954)

On hearing about the Raja being let off, all the Yadavas were filled with a certain fear in the mind. All had gone to abide in the ocean. (they had gone to the island of Dwarka to live there) and were all uttering these words. The poet Siam has stated that none had then stepped towards the town (Mathura). Even the mighty warriors were feeling frieghtened. If appeared as if all of them, (being without the weapons) were feeling that they were about to face death without being struck with weapons (without waging war). (1955)

Sri Krishna stood at the shores of the ocean and was asking for some fun from it. With his bow, he shot an arrow and said, you leave that area and ocean shifted backwards." Then someone had erected palatial buildings (golden houses) for them. Who would not like them? All were thinking in their minds that Sri Krishna had (ended) brought an end to all their miseries (afflictions) now. (1956)

Even men like Sankadik, who had been serving him since long, had not gained the acceptance of the Lord, (Sri Krishna) what have all those persons gained, who had been worshipping his statues? Have they realized the true form of Lord? The poet Siam has stated that most of the people had imagined the Lord to be abiding in the chanting of Vedic hymns (mantras). When Sri Krishna had arranged for certain (construction) of houses of gold, then all were saying that the Lord was abiding there only" (Sri Krishna was himself the Lord Almighty). (1957)

The poet Siam has stated that all the warriors were saying these words with great joy and admiration. "O Men! No one had found the secret of this Krishna! Infact, he had only created all the fourteen worlds (Universe). He alone, in the form of Ram, had killed Ravana, the demon Mur, and Subakan and had torn the mouth of demon 'Bak'. Listen to some more news! He had killed the demon Sankh with one strike of his mace alone." (1958)

"He had fought for thousands of years against Madh and Ketab, and had taken life out of their bodies (killed them). When the ocean Chheer was churned, then he alone had protected the interest of the gods and brought much comfort and tranquillity to them. He alone had killed Ravana by (fixing) striking an arrow at his chest. Moreover when we were surrounded by great sufferings, then also he was standing like a rock in the battle field (he was standing firm)." (1959)

"Moreover, listen with great attention that even a king like Kansa was destroyed for our sake and protection. He had killed many horses and elephants (of enemy) as if he had uprooted the trees from their roots. Moreover, all the enemies who had attacked us, had been killed by him alone. Finally leaving aside our houses, built with mud, were now constructed with gold by him. (1960)

When Balram said these words, then all were convinced in their minds, that he had killed the demons like Bak and Agh including the mighty warrior Chandoor, who was also mauled and killed by him. Even Indra was unable to gain victory over Kansa, but Krishna had thrown him down on the ground by holding him with his hair. Now he had got constructed our houses of gold. All were saying that in the form of Sri Krishna they had attained the Lord Almighty himself. (1961)

The days were passing in perfect peace and tranquillity and no one was undergoing any suffering. All have got houses of gold, so even Shiva was feeling tempted to have such a house. Leaving Indrapuri, Indra alongwith all other gods, had come down to see these beautiful houses. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna had got Dwarka puri designed specially in a particular position. (1962)

Now the episode of the marriage of Balbhadar begins.

Now the marriage of Rukmani episode begins.
Swaiyya'

When Balram got married, then all men and women felt happy. The poet Siam has stated that then Sri Krishna was keenly interested in getting married. On the other side Bhikham (Raja Bhishmak) had organised the marriage of his daughter and called the whole army at his command (called all his relatives for the function). It seemed that Sri Krishna had made proper arrangements for his marriage. (1968)

Raja Bhikham had thought of marrying his daughter to Sri Krishna, as there was no other better function then this, that they could look upon Sri Krishna as their son-in-law, thus winning acclaim in the world. In the meantime his son (Bhisham's). Rukhmi came there and getting enraged said, "O dear father! What are you going to do? The girl from such a caste was not acceptable to us, and now by giving our daughter into the Yadava clan, how will we survive with dignity in the world?" (1969)

Swaiyya'

There was a warrior by the name Shishupal in the town of Chanderi, so call him for managing the affairs of the marriage. Then he said, "By giving our daughter to (Krishna) the milkman, we will die due to our shameful behaviour. Call one good and virtuous Brahmin and send him to bring Shishupal. Give away the daughter as per Vedas to him (Shishupal) and perform the marriage according to Vedic rites. (1970)

On hearing the son's talk, the Raja sent a brahmin to call Shishupal there. The brahmin, giving his benedictions, proceeded to call the warriors. This talk was heard by the Raja's daughter (Rukmani) also. The poet Siam has stated that Rukmani was showing her opposition by striking her head, and tears were flowing from her eyes. It appeared as if she had lost all hopes (from its roots) and the tree of marriage had withered away. (1971)

If my father continues to be obstinate, then I shall consume posion and give away my life. I am making this very clear. The Raja's daughter said, "I will not marry that man, Shishupal; but if I marry, then I shall marry only Sri Krishna. (1972)

Swaiyya'

O lotus-eyed beloved! Do not think about anything (without delay) and start immediately on reading my letter. Shishupal is coming to marry me, so O krishna! Do not delay at all!

O Lord! Come and win me over, by killing them and take me to Dwarka and thus by doing so, win the praises of the world. The poet Siam has said that on hearing my predicament (Rukmani's) from the brahmin, come immediately (by taking wings). (1975)

O Lord of the Universe (of fourteen worlds)? Listen to my message with full attention, which I am sending. In your absence, all the men are filled with rage, egiosm and pride and their souls are controlled by the three-pronged (Maya) worldly falsehood. Moreover, listen to me that I have never thought of even Shiva (gods like Shiva) in my mind! So on reading this letter, come immediately. O my love! There are only three days left in my marriage. The moon appearing from the East, the full moon appearing from the East, the full moon, is causing me great (burning) jealousy or suffering. It appears that the god of love (Kamdev) with red eyes was frightening me in your absence." (1978)

"O Sri Krishna! My eyes are fixed at (your arrival) you. I have tried to divert them, but they do not agree. Once these eyes are entangled with the tilted eyes of Sri Krishna, then these eyes cannot be detached (disentangled). In spite of my best efforts, these eyes cannot be diverted, so without having a glance of your face, these eyes cannot be satisfied." The poet Siam has stated that due to my modesty, both my eyes have become like the battle of the magician (juggler) and are stationary." (1979)

Rukmani gave a decorated chariot to the brahmin and by giving him lot of wealth, satiated him fully. Thus the brahmin was sent for bringing Sri Krishna, alongwith him." The brahmin was also very much delighted at heart, and left alogwith the letter. The poet Siam has stated this episode with great interest. Before it the brilliance of Sheshnag, moon, Varuna, (god) and even Indra-puri appears insignificant (would appear pale). (1981)

From one side Sri Krishna, riding the chariot moved fast, while from the other side Shishpal came alongwith a huge army. Hearing about the arrival of Shishupal the gates of the town and the markets (bazars) were decorated. Then Rukmi, alongwith a well organised army went ahead to receive Shishupal. The poet Siam has stated that all the warriors were very much delighted in their hearts. (1984)

Many other kings, alongwith their multi-coloured armies, also came there, and they had developed great keenness to witness the marriage of Rukmani. They came alongwith great many clarionets, small drums, large drums being sounded alongwith twinkling bells for the big event. The poet Siam has stated that due to their arrival, Sri Krishna had also come there stealthily and without any warning (notice). (1985)

The poet Siam has stated that the preparations for the marriage as per Vedic rites were made from both sides. The altar of marriage was also purified with the Chanting of Vedic hymns (mantras). All the brahmins were also given many gifts in alms; the 'burning fire site was also set up for marriage ceremony, but without Sri Krishna everything appeared fruitless or meaningless. (1986)

In the meantime the brahmin (prohit) alongwith Rukmani, started for the place of worship of the goddess. Making her ride a chariot, many warriors also followed her, and all moved further. Seeing all the splendour, Rukmi spoke these words, that they were very fortunate, as the Lord Almighty had saved his honour fully. (1987)

When Rukmani reached the temple, then she felt greatly depressed with grief, and felt restless. She wailed and told the goddes, "O Mother! You had brought this Shishupal only as my spouse? (could not find a better one). (1988)

The goddess then said to Rukmani -

Swaiyya'

Seeing her bad shape, the mother goddess appeared in person, and said this with a smile, "You are the spouse of Krishna only, so do not entertain any doubts in your mind about it. Whatever Shishupal had thought in his mind, will not happen as per his hopes (desires). The poet Siam has stated that Durga (goddess) then said, "O Rukmani, Listen to me! Whatever you have got in your mind, will happen according to your wish only." (1990)

Couplet

Thus Rukmani, getting this blessing from Durga and getting delighted at heart, left that place (temple). After riding her chariot she was hoping to meet Krishna as her true friend (saviour). (1991)

Swaiyya'

Keeping the thought of Krishna in mind (keeping his picture in her eyes), she was going back riding the chariot. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna was not terrified (worried) by seeing a huge army of Sishupal. Sri Krishna, in the presence of the enemy, came and jumped into the chariot of Rukmani and said, "O Men! I am taking away, Rukmani alongwith me." Then with great force Sri Krishna held Rukmani by hand alongwith him." Then with great force Sri Krishna held Rukmani by hand and made her jump into his chariot. (1992)

Taking Rukmani into his chariot, he addressed all the warriors like this, "O Warriors! Now I am going to take her away in the very presence (before his eyes) of her brother Rukmi. If anyone possesses enough stength, then let him fight with me and take her away. "The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna then challenged everyone saying, "I vow by the name of Rama, that today I will kill you all and will not relent (a bit even) at all." (1993)

Hearing all the talk of Sri Krishna, all the warriors got furious with rage, and attacked him. The poet Siam has stated that the warriors were excited with rage, and patting their arm, with great fury, the warriors attacked him. By sounding their clarionets, drums large and small, tinkling bells and eymbals they rushed towards him. By taking out his bow, Sri Krishna shot some arrows, and sent them all to Yama's hell (killed all of them). (1994)

The warriors, who had not retraced their steps backwards while confronting the enemy, came forward with great fury. They were thundering like the clouds of monsoon (Sawan) hy sounding their drums and yelling loudly, but with the shooting of Krishna's arrows, none could face him any more for a moment even. Many mighty warriors were lying down (wounded) and were crying and wailing, while some of them were lying dead. (1995)

Seeing the defeat of his army, Shishupal became agitated with rage, and came forward and then addressed Sri Krishna thus, "I am not like Jarasandh, whom you had made to run away and he stretched his bow upto his ears and shot an arrow. It seemed as if all his fury against Krishna had appeared and directed against him with great force. (1996)

After cutting the arrow (into pieces), his charoit was broken (cut) and the head of the charioteer was also chopped off. All the four horses were killed by cutting off their heads and gave many shocks (on) with the shields. then suddenly rushing towards him, gave a slap on his face, with the striking of slap, he fell down on the ground. Why do you not say, if there was anyother warrior, who could dare to face Krishna and fight against him? (1998)

Whosoever has thought or meditated on Sri Krishna in his mind, has been able to attain the Lord (was sent to heavens). According to the poet Siam, if anyone decided to fight with him by standing firm in his position, could not oppose him for a moment even, while whosoever had joined in the love of Sri Krishna, had proceeded to heavens by piercing through the worlds, and no one could stop him from doing so. If anyone tried to oppose Sri Krishan, he was smashed and thrown on the ground. (1999)

Sri Krishna had thus destroyed most of the enemy force and had felled (thrown) down Shishupal also in an unconscious state. The rest of the army, after watching the battle scene, fled away out of fear. They were stopped by their commanders but no one dared to come forward to fight again. Then Rukmi, brother of Rukmani, came forward with a huge force to fight against Krishna personally. (2000)

Many mighty warriors from his side rushed with great fury to kill Sri Krishna and all were saying, "O Krishna! Where are you running? Come and fight with us." But Sri Krishna killed all of them. The poet Siam has praised the scene like this. It appeared as if the moths had fallen on the sight of a lamp (candle) without any hesitation, but none came back alive. (2001)

When Sri Krishna had killed all the warriors, then the furious Rukmi said, "When a milkman like you had said, "When a milkman like you had taken up the bow and arrows, then the Kashatriyas had lost all their valour of a Kashatriya. As soon as be finished saying this, Sri Krishna shot an arrow at him and made him unconscious and caught hold of him from his top and holding it shaved his head off, and was making fun of him, as it came to his mind. Then at the request of his spouse (Rukmani), the beloved (Sri Krishna) left Rukmi and winning full victory over him, let Rukmi go scot free. (2004)

In the mean time, Balram with his hoe, and getting furious with rage, also joined the fray and pushed in the fight. On one side Rukmi established a new town there and started living there, while Sri Krishna came to Dwarka alongwith Rukmani. When the people heard about Sri Krishna's winning over his spouse and bringing her there, then all the people came to see her. For carrying out the marriage ceremony, all the great brahmins were collected there. The poet Siam has stated that all other warriors were also invited there. (2007)

When the women of Dwarka heard about the marriage of Sri Krishna, they all came there singing songs of joy joining together. The poet Siam has stated that all women were dancing around fully with merriment and were clapping together. All the women were making merry by joining together and were looking gorgeous in their celebrations. What to talk of others, even the spouses of all the gods also came down together (to watch it)? (2008)

To see the beautiful woman (Rukmani) all those women who came, leaving their homes, to this merry-making celebration, were all dancing and singing and had forgotten all about their own chores. All the women were enjoying the marriage festivities and were much delighted at heart. All were saying like this. "We are all sacrifice to Krishna." When they watch Sri Krishna moving around, they were all enamoured by his appearance, and were enticed by him (within their hearts). (2009)

When the sacrificial fire pit was set up for the marriage ceremony of Sri Krishna, then all the women of the town sang together songs of joy. The magicians (jugglers) were dancing there, accompanied by the music of (mirdang) small drums. There were millions of (sports) games being played, while the prostitutes were countless, dancing around. Whosoever came to see the fun, was overjoyed with the fun and frolic. (2010)

One woman was playing on flute, while another was playing the cybals with hand; one damsel was dancing, while another beauty was singing. One woman was playing the tinkling bells, while another was playing the mirdang, while another was showing some feats. Then one woman was explaining their meanings and makes all the on-lookers much delighted. (2011)

Completely drunk with the booze (intoxication) (of liquor) Sri Krishna was seated in great joy, all their clothes were coloured in yellow colour, and warriors were enjoying. The poet Siam has stated that the beggars were asked to dance and lot of money was being distributed among them, and all were greatly amused at watching Sri Krishna seated there. (2012)

Sri Krishna was married to Rukmani according to Vedic rites, and she was won over from her brother with great effort. On hearing about the victory (of Krishna) all the three worlds were over joyed at heart. The poet Siam has stated that all the Yadavas were pleased with this whole show of Sri Krishna. (2013)

The mother of Sri Krishna then drank the water, after circumambulating it over the heads of the couple and gave lot of alms to the brahmins. Then she said, "I have enjoyed all the bliss of the whole world to day. O friends! My heart is overjoyed to day" and then added, "My heart is full of hopes now and is not under my control." O friends! I am a sacrifice to the day today, when my son has got married." (2014)

On hearing this talk, the son of Sri Krishna (Parduman) got greatly excited with rage, and rushed armed with his bow and arrow, sword and mace to kill the enemy demon Sambar. On reaching his house, he shouted at the gate. "The child whom you had thrown into sea, has come to fight with you. (2026)

When the demon (Sambar) heard these words of Krishna's son (Parduman), then he came up holding his mace and other weapons. He fought a battle as is described normally as per the rules of war. Neither he fled away from the battlefield nor could he force Parduman to relent a step back from there. There was a fierce battle, which has been described by the poet Siam like this. (2027)

When the battle raged for a long time, then the enemy with deceit, went upto the skies. From there he became furious and (showered) hurled stones like a rain shower, on the son of Krishna, by taking stones in hand. But Parduman, with the help of his arrows, made each stone one by one as useless and in-effective, and threw them on the ground by piercing with his weapons (arrows) with great fury. (2028)

The gods (crowd) who were watching this scene, showered their blessings on seeing Parduman's manliness. So Parduman threw him (down) unconsious on the ground and a blood stream started flowing on the ground. The son of Krishna thus proved himself as worthy son, who had killed Sambar with one stroke of the sword. (2029)

She again assumed the form of a beautiful woman, and bringing him down from the shoulders, placed a yellow cloth on his shoulders. She showed his appearance where all his (Krishna's) sixteen thousand wives of his (women) were present. They all got bewildered, since they thought him to be Sri Krishna himself. (2032)

On seeing his form, reasembling mainly with Sri Krishna, they felt a bit hesitant. One friend taking the other's arm in hand said, "that Krishna had brought another newly wedded wife." Another woman remarked on seeing his chest that we should think properly as all his appearance (signs and symbols) was exactly like Krishna, but there was no sign of Bhirgulata on his chest (as with Krishna's chest). (2033)

On seeing him, Rukmani's breast got filled with milk, and developing great love for him, said these words benevolently. "Rukmani said, "O friend! My son was also like this man which Lord Krishna had bestowed on me, and then snatched away. After saying this, she heaved a sigh, (of sorrow). He is your son!" On hearing this news, the whole town was filled with songs of joy and excitement. The poet Siam has stated that it appeared as if Sri Krishna had attained all the fortunes of life. (2035)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar from Dasam Sakand Bachittar Natak pertaining to the kidnapping of Parduman by the demon Sambar and then killing him and then meeting with Rukmani and Kahna is completed.

Now the Episode of bringing the jewel from Satrajit sun and killing of Jamwant begins.

Couplet

On this side the warrior Satrajit had worshipped the sun (god) for long, and being pleased with him bestowed a jewel (Mani) on him like himself. (2036)

Swaiyya'

Bringing the jewel from the sun, Satrajit had come back home on that day only. The poet Siam has stated that he had worshipped the sun and pleased him immensely and with great penance he sang the praises of Sun, so on being greatly delighted and pleased with him, the sun gave him a jewel (mani). This whole episode was related to Sri Krishna by the residents of the town on hearing it. (2037)

Krishna then told them -

Swaiyya'

Krishna then sent for Satrajit and joking with him asked him to offer the king Ugrasain whatever gift he had gained from the sun by pleasing him (sun) right now. The jewel with the splendour of lightning (mani) may be handed over to the king with great pleasure at heart. Sri Krishna also said this but he would not agree to it. Satrajit became silent and continued sitting there and did not give any reply to Sri Krishna. (2038)

After saying this, Krishna was also sitting there quitely, but Satrajit's brother went out for hunting (game). He tied that gem (jewel) to his head, on seeing which people thought him to be a second sun. When he went to the jungle, he saw a great lion there, and pointing at him, he shot an arrow. The lion lost the brunt of the arrow and then killed him. (2039)

Chopaiee

When he shot the arrow at the lion, he stood firmly picking up courage and gave a slap with his claw, thus the turban alongwith jewel was thrown off his head. (2040)

Couplet

After killing him, the lion alongwith the turban and jewel went inside the jungle. There was a hunter in the jungle, who had seen the lion. (2041)

Swaiyya'

The bear, on seeing the jewel and its splendour thought to himself that the lion had brought some fruit, which he should (snatch and) eat immediately. Feeling helpless due to hunger, he rushed to eat this (fruit) gem. As the lion was moving onwards, the bear came suddenly and started fighting with the lion. With a step of his claw he struck the lion, and laid him dead on the ground (killing him). (2042)

Couplet

The bear called Jamwan, after killing the lion, and taking the jewel felt very happy and relieved. Then he went to his own place, where he was staying. (2043)

Satrajit without realizing the secret of this happening, related this episode to be heard by all and stated that Krishna had killed his brother, and had snatched the gem from him. (2044)

Swaiyya'

On hearing this episode Sri Krishna had called Satrajit and told him, "O Satrajit! You are telling all these people that Krishna had killed your brother and taken away the gem. Hearing this story, I am greatly agitated and feeling restless with rage. So you also go for searching it and I will also accompany you. So both went in search of the gem (jewel). (2045)

Alongwith some Yadavas, when Sri Krishna left in search of it, they reached a place, where the horse-rider (Satrajit's brother) was lying dead. Both of them saw the dead body. There they saw the signs of the lion's claws on the ground, so all the warriors were saying that the lion had killed him. Then going little further, they found the lion also lying dead there, then all the warriors were shocked and bewildered. (2046)

Couplet

On seeing the marks of the bears claws there, all were pondering with bowed heads (as to what happened). Where the marks would lead us, was the place, where the turban would be lying (they thought). So all the warriors moved in that direction. (2047)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

The Lord, by whose blessings, the gods like Indra etc. had been victorious, and all the enemies had placed the sun and moon in position for continuing their alloted functions, the Lord who had converted the henchback woman into a beautiful woman in no time, and the whole garden was filled with aroma, the same Lord was now following the claw marks of the bear. (2048)

On tracing the signs of claw marks, all reached a cave finally, then Sri Krishna said like this - "Is there any warrior, who is prepared to go inside this cave, but no one came forward. Everyone thought in his mind that the bear had entered this cave only, while someone said that he may not be there. Then Sri Krishna said, "We have finally come to conclusion that the claw marks are leading into this cave only." (2049)

When none of the warrior entered the cave, then Sri Krishna himself went inside the cave. The bear, knowing their movements had got ready to give a fight with great fury and came before them. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna was fighting with him with fists for twelve days. Such a battle had never been fought throughout the four ages before, nor will it be fought again in future. They were fighting day and night for twelve days, but Sri Krishna never got frightened from the bear. Then he used his legs and fists in the fight. In the meantime the bear's strength gave way and he realized that Sri Krishna possessed more power, so dropping the fight, he bowed to Krishna and considered him to be Ram Chander himself. (2051)

The bear bowed to him with lot of entreaties for mercy, and said these words with great humility. O Lord! You had killed Ravana also, and you alone had saved the honour of Daropadi. I have made a mistake, and now pardon me keeping in view Shiva and the sun, as witnesses, and offered his daughter to Krishna, bringing her before him. (2052)

On one side Krishna after the fight had got worried, while all the warriors, waiting outside got hopeless (disappointed) and went back to their places. They were under the impression that Sri Krishna had entered the cave, and someone had killed him. The warriors were thus crying with tears in their eyes, and were rolling on the ground with their heads on the ground while others said, that they had failed to support Krishna. (2053)

The whole army, which had accompanied Sri Krishna, came back to Raja Ugarsain crying and wailing and the Raja was greatly upset and grieved at seeing their condition. Then the Raja rushed to Balram to enquire from him, but he also cried and told the Raja that Krishna had gone inside the cave, but never came out. (2054)

Barlam said -

Swaiyya'

Either Sri Krishna, fighting with the enemy, had been killed or in search of this fool's jewel, he had found the path of Raja Bal's place. On his brother's life the jewel had been taken by the Yama, Krishna had gone there to bring it back, or this fools words had affected him adversely and due to his reduced prestige he had not come back home. (2055)

When Balram told all these things in a wailing tone to Raja Ugarsain, then all of the Yadavas fought Satrajit with fists and legs. With his turban, they tied him down, and threw him in the well, by holding his kness. No one uttered a word to help him or let him off (pardon him) and everyone had thought of putting an end to his life. (2056)

When Krishna's wives heard about these stories about Krishna, then some of them fell down on the ground wailing and crying and some of them, due to their doubts started beating their breasts. Some of them were saying, "The spouse had given up his life, O Mother! Now what will be our plight? Then Rukmani also gave lot of alms to the brahmins and herself came out to perform Sati (to burn herself)." (2057)

Couplet

Basudev and Devki also got worried (and doubtful about Krishna's safety). But knowing Sri Krishna's two-pronged (worldly and heavenly) powers, they stopped Rukmani from performing Sati function (burning herself) (2058)

Swaiyya'

The poet Siam had stated that Devki came and tried to console the daughter-in-law (son's spouse) and told her, "If Sri Krishna had died fighting in battle, then it behoves you to perform Sati rites, but if in search of this fool's jewel, he had gone too far away, then you should calm down, and wait for his return. Saying this, Devki fell at the feet of her daughter-in-law. (2059)

After giving such advice to her daughter-in-law, Devki started worshipping goddess Bhawani, and served her for twenty-eight days and tried to (propitiate) placate the goddess. The poet Siam has stated, then the goddes Durga was pleased with her and blessed her saying "that Sri Krishna would surely come back, so do not lament. "In the meantime Sri Krishna came back with the jewel and the woman (spouse) alogwith him. (2060)

On seeing Krishna alongwith the jewel and the spouse, all were delighted and all forgot about sorrowful attitude. The mother brought cold water in a tumbler and drank it after circumambulating it over the heads of the son and the daughter-in-law. All the Yadavas were happy and there were rejoicings in the town. The poet Siam has stated that from that day onwards, all started believing in Durga as the mother of the Universe (and worshipping her). (2061)

Here the chapter on victory over Jamwant and bringing the jewel and spouse is completed.

Swaiyya'

On seeing Satrajit, and taking the gem in hand, Sri Krishna struck it on his head and said furiously, "O fool! The gem, for which you had blamed me, now take that jewel and keep it safe. All the Yadavas were shocked and said, "Just see, how furious Krishna had become with rage?" The poet Siam has described this whole episode in poetry form and made it known throughout the world. Holding the gem in hand, Satrajit kept standing there, and did not look around at all. He was feeling greatly Shameful, and being agitated went (away) home, feeling that he had developed enmity with Krishna and a slander (defamation) had been ascribed to him. Apart from this, his brother had also been killed. He lost all his patience, being afflicted with suffering. Then he thought to himself that all suffering could be alleviated by giving away his daugher in marriage to Sri Krishna. (2063)

Now the episode of marrige of Satrajit's daughter begins

Swaiyya'

Then, as per Vedic rites by calling the brahmins, Satrajit arranged for the marriage of his daughter (to Sri Krishna), called Satbhama, whose praises were spread throughout the world, and she gained the same position as Lachhmi. It would be more appropriate to say that even Lachhmi had no comparison to her. Then offering the jewel in the marriage of Satbhama with great respect, Satrajit invited Sri Krishna to his (house) place. (2064)

Sri Krishna then listening to all this talk alongwith the marriage party with great pomp and show started for his place. On hearing about the arrival of Sri Krishna, all went ahead to receive him. On bringing him to the marriage site, they performed the marriage rites, and lot of gifts were distributed among the brahmins. Then Sri Krishna, getting married and being delighted came back home, alongwith the bride. (2065)

By then a news was heard that the son of Pandav, had come to Lachhia's house. All the villagers requested the Kaurvas but they did not show any mercy. So, considering this fact, Krishna called all the Yadavas and left for that place. So Sri Krishna got their chariots ready and left for the site. (2066)

When Sri Krishna had left, then Barmakrit thought of a plan and taking Akroor alongwith him said, "O Man! Krishna had gone elsewhere so let us join together and snatch this jewel from Satrajit." So thinking about it, they killed Satrajit. So after killing him and taking away the jewel (mani) Bramakrit went away to his home. (2067)

Chopaiee

The emissaries gave the message to Sri Krishna that Bramakrit had killed Satrajit and had taken away the wealth of that jewel, and had caused great suffering to your spouse (wife). (2069)

On hearing these words of Kritbarma, he replied, "Krishna was very powerful, and he had killed many enemy, whom he wanted to kill. so we do not possess enough strength to fight against him. O Brother! He had killed Kansa in a moment and felt greatly relieved." (2072)

O Brother! The person, who could go elsewhere, and save his life, would be the only person, who would be saved. (2073)

Swaiyya'

Bramakrit became morose after giving him the jewel, and thought to himself "That he should run away but where to? I have done a great disservice towards Krishna and for the sake of getting this gem, I have killed a warrior like Satrajit. So getting furious with rage Sri Krishna had picked up his whole strength. If I stay here then he would kill me. "So considering all this he went away to the North direction. (2074)

Taking a clue about the game they moved in the direction, where there were chances of the prey. They killed many blue bulls, pigs, great bears, and multi-coloured (multi-horned) stags, and many percupines. They hunted rhinoceros, buffaloes, wild elephants and many lions. Whosoever was struck by Krishna's arrows, had no signs of strength left and fell down unconscious on the ground. (2088)

Taking Arjuna alongwith him, Sri Krishna penetrated into the jungle and killed many deer. Some animals were killed with swords, and some were shot with arrows by pointing at them. Making the horses speed up and making the dogs run, they killed many others, who had escaped earlier. Any wild animals, who tried to escape from Krishna, were not allowed to go alive. (2089)

Many deer were killed by Arjuna, while many were hunted down by Sri Krishna himself. Whosoever managed to run away alive were all caught by the chasing dogs. The partridges, which had flown towards the sky, were chased by hawks, let loose by Sri Krishna. The poet Siam has stated that many deer were chased by the leopards and killed. (2090)

Many dhutian, ukaban, basina, with tinkling bells tied around their necks, and decorated with laces, were made to chase other birds, and none was allowed to go back alive. (2091)

When both Arjuna and Krishna hunted together, they felt very happy and satisfied. The poet Siam has stated that they developed great affection with each other and were keenly looking for some place with water, so they totally gave up hunting and both Sri Krishna and Arjuna came to the banks of Jamuna. (2092)

When they were going to take (drink) water, they saw a beautiful woman, so Krishna went upto Arjuna and said, "Go and ask her as to who she was and which place she belonged to?" obeying the ordains of Krishna, Arjuna talked to the woman like this. "Whose daughter are you, which is your land, who is your brother and whose spouse are you?" (2093)

The Jamuna replied to Arjuna -
Couplet

Then Jamuna replied to Arjuna like this, that she had wanted to marry Krishna as such she had worshipped there and performed penance there. (2094)

Then Arjuna told Krishna -
Swiayya'

Then Arjuna, coming back and bowing his head to Krishna, said, "O Krishna! She was the daughter of the sun, her name was Jamuna, as known to the world." Then Krishna asked, "Why had she dressed up like an ascetic, leaving all household chores?" Then Arjuna replied, "O Sri Krishna! Listen to me! She had done all this for marrying you." (2095)

Listening to Arjuna's words, Sri Krishna held the arm of Jamna and took her onto his chariot. Her face was shining brightly like the moon, and her cheeks were looking glorious with splendour. Then Krishna showered all his Grace etc. on her and Sri Krishna took her home. This episode is known to all in the world. (2096)

When Sri Krishna came back to his place, alongwith Jamna on the chariot. The king Yudishtra then clasped the feet of Sri Krishna before the assembly, gathered there for the marriage ceremony and said, "O Sri Krishna! Just as you had created Dwarka town, in the same manner please arrange to construct my town also. Then hearing his request, Sri Krishna then ordained Vishav Karma to construct this town and he constructed the town likewise. (2097)

Swaiyya'

After taking leave of Pandavas sons and Kunti, Sri Krishna left the place. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna came to the place where king of Ujjain lived. Even Durodhana had been enamoured to marry his daughter, so he also came in the full preparations alongwith a huge force to marry the daughter of Ujjain's king. (2098)

From one side Duryodhana came with a huge army while Sri Krishna also landed there in the town. To watch this marriage many other kings and warriors also arrived there. The poet Siam has stated that they had sounded bugles of joy on the marriage of any duaghter or sister of the town. In the meantime Sri Krishna got married to her and went alongwith Arjuna to Ayodhya. (2099)

Chopaiee

When Sri Krishna reached Ayodhya, the Raja (of that place) came to receive him. He made him seated on the throne and got relieved of his minds' afflictions. (2100)

He bowed and held the feet of Sri Krishna in his hands and said that all his sufferings were cast away by having personally met him (by having his glance). The king then developed great love for Krishna at heart and was united at heart with Krishna's meditation. (2101)

Then Sri Krishna told the king -

Swaiyya'

By seeing great love of the king, Sri Krishna laughed and said, to him, "O Rajan! You belong to the clan of (family of) Ram Chander who getting enraged, had killed a warrior like Ravana even. So it does not behove the Kashatriyas to request (beg) for anything, even then withtout any hesitation, I am asking (requesting) for something from you. You give me your daughter (in marriage) as my heart is enamoured with her love." (2102)

Then the Raja replied to Krishna -

Chopaiee

Then the Raja told Sri Krishna "That he had vowed for one thing. Anyone who could tame these seven bulls (together) in one go, he alone could be the spouse (mate) of my duaghter, and could take her away." (2103)

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna then tied his yellow coloured cloth (scarf) to his waist, he changed (transformed) himself into seven forms, though it looked like one Krishna only to the on looker, but none could visualise the secret on watching alone. By thudding (pressing) his feet and with twisted eyes Sri Krishna became the most powerful (mighty) warrior out of all and as he tamed all the seven bulls, all of them were all praise for him and (praised) thanked him. When Sri Krishan had tamed all the seven bulls, then all the warriors were telling him (Krishna) that whosoever had tried had been thrown off by the bulls with their horns. Who is the warrior, in the world who could put a string in the nose of all seven (for taming them). They then said with a smile that apart from Sri Krishna there could be none other so powerful, with such perserverance, who could tear apart the enemy into pieces (Who else could be so mighty?)" (2105)

Many Sadhus (ascetics) used to say with a laugh that there could be no other warrior as powerful as Sri Krishna in the whole world, who had defeated even Meghnad, the winner (victor) of Indra and had removed the head of Ravana from his trunk. When the great elephant (Gajraj) was in great suffering due to the Octopus, then the Lord only had saved him (Krishna). When his slaves (saints) are in trouble, then he (Krishna) becomes a warrior, as he feels the pangs of their suffering on seeing them in trouble. (2106)

So according to Vedic rites, the marriage of Sri Krishna was solmenised. Feeling great joy at heart, all the brahmins were given new gifts in alms. Then he gave great many elephants and horses alongwith huge wealtth to Sri Krishna. The poet Siam has stated that the Raja won great laurels in the world by marrying off his daughter to Krishna. The Raja then told the assembly -
Swaiyya'

The Raja, seated on the throne, told the assembly that, "Sri Krishna had performed a similar feat as Ram Chander had done in Stretching the Shiva's bow. By winning over the hand of Ujjain Raja's daughter when Sri Krishna set his foot on the town of Ayodhya, then on viewing him all present there acclaimed Sri Krishna as a great warrior. (2108)

When the Raja perceived (thought) in his mind that Sri Krishna was the right type of warrior, and Sri Krishna never gave any importance to his enemy in the battle field. All the ministers, on seeing Sri Krishna, said that he was the right spouse (choice). The poet Siam has stated that the king of Ayodhya felt greatly elated (relieved) at heart. (2109)

When the brahmins, who were great experts in such socio-religious functions, came to this gathering, according to the poet Siam, They said these words on having given their blessings to the great king. O Raja! Listen! You have (bound) attained the right-type of spouse in Sri Krishna suddenly for the daughter, for whom you had sent many brahmins to far off places (in foreign lands). (2110)

On hearing such words, the Raja felt very happy and with increased enthusiasm gave so much in her dowry, which no one could imagine and lot of festivities were organised at his palace. The brahmins were given lot of offerings and then perceiving all this Sri Krishna felt greatly delighted at heart. Then he sent his beautiful daughter alongwith Sri Krishna. (2111)

When Sri Krishna came back, having won in Swambar the daughter of the king of Ayodhya, then he wished to go for a walk alongwith Arjuna in the garden. He sent for lot of opium, poppy, bhang, (hamp) and liquor for consumption. He sent for the alms-seekers (beggars) who came in large numbers, who were countless (which was beyond count). (2112)

Lot of prostitutes were seen dancing there, who were playing on jhangh, clarionet, flute and mirdang (musicial instruments). Some were dancing in circles, and some women would give a jerk to Sri Krishna. Sri Krishna offered them silken robes, studded with pearls and rubies, which were very pleasing to the heart (eyes). The poet Siam has stated that these pearls were very valuable (costly), which were beyond the reach of Indra even. (2113)

The prostitutes were receiving lot of money for dances, while singers were also given many gifts (in alms). They were placating Sri Krishna by reciting Chhands and Swaiyya's. Then they were dancing together in all directions and were singing going round in circles. so (tell me), whosoever had come to Krishna's place, had no dearth of anything (everything was in plenty there). (2114)

Then, giving away many gifts to them, and taking Arjuna alongwith him, Sri Krishna came to the dining hall. He sent for poppy, hemp, opium, and liquor and consuming wine forgot all the worldly worries. Being drunk with all four intoxicants Sri Krishna told Arjuna, that "Brahma had done one thing bad. Why did he not make the eighth ocean of liquor?" (2115)

Then Arjuna requested Sri Krishna with folded hands, saying, "That foolish brahmin did not know the art of making such enjoyable essences." (2116)

Then Sri Krishna made Indra understand fully how to deal with him and sent him back, and said, "O Man! Why do you worry? I will come with you and will not hesitate to tackle him (will not be deterred). Once let me arm myself with my weapons, and get onto my chariot with such a fury that I shall cut the enemy into pieces in a moment, so you need not worry. (2119)

So Indra bowed his head and went with his mind to destroy that Bhumasur. Then Krishna took the army of Yadavas alongwith him, but did not take Arjuna with him. Also he took the love of one woman within him (he was absorbed in a woman's love). The poet Siam has related this wonderful drama in this manner, that Sri Krishna did not move towards him, but his end had come to attack him. (2120)

When Sri Krishna, riding his Garuda, moved towards the enemy, he saw first a fort of stone, and another built of steel (iron) was seen by him with his own eyes. Then he saw a moat filled with water around it and then thought of fire in the fourth place. Then the fifth thing he visualised was the circle of wind around it and as a sixth problem he saw many entanglements. Then Sri Krishna loudly challenged him with great rage. (2121)

Sri Krishna said-

When Sri Krishna said these words then he realized that an enemy had come to attack him. He had also heard about him that he had destroyed many forts with one strike only, getting enraged. A demon Mur used to live in a fest of water, hearing the noise he launched an attack on Krishna. Being furious with rage he attacked the transport of Krishna with his trident. (2123)

The Garuda did not take this strike seriously, but he struck suddenly with his mace onto Krishna. Seeing the coming strike towards him Krishna thought to himself. So with great fury he took up his mace in the hand and with one strike avoided the oncoming strike. (2124)

When the strike of demon Mur went without any purpose (was ineffective) then the demon became more furious and thundered. He then enlarged his body size, and enlarged his mouth also, and then attacked Krishna with the object of killing him. Then Krishna took out his sword from the waist (tied) and pointing at him shot at him. Thus he cut off the head of the enemy just as a potter, taking, a wire, removes the earthen pot from the revolving wheel and threw him down. (2125)

Now the episode of the battle against Bhumasur begins

Swaiyya'

When Sri Krishna had killed the demon Mur with his sword, his soul was despatched to hell immediately. The poet Siam has stated that the supporting warriors of Mur demon then waged a fierce battle with weapons like bows and arrows, and swords. The family members of Mur (demon) had heard that Krishna had killed the demon Mur, then the seven sons of Mur, with a multi-faceted army attacked Sri Krishna. (2126)

The poet Siam has stated that they shot arrows from all the ten directions by encircling Krishna, pointing at him. Many warriors, holding their maces in hands, without having any fear in mind, then fought against Krishna. Having borne the brunt of their attacks with weapons on his body, Sri Krishna getting furious with rage, then did not spare anyone's life and cut all of them into pieces. (2127)

The son of Earth, Bhumasur then learnt that Krishna had killed the sons of Mur demon, and the whole force accompanying then, had been killed in no time. When Bhumasur came forward for fighting a battle, then the warriors of Sri Krishna got their coats of iron worn (protective covering). All others took up their weapons and surrounding the enemy, Krishna started thundering aloud. It appeared as if on the dooms day the clouds had appeared for destruction and had positioned themselves, or in the land of the god of death, instead of the warriors talking among themselves, the drums of merriment were being sounded. (2131)

When the enemy force attacked like the clouds, Krishna had realized that Bhumasur was the son of Earth and he was a king. The poet Siam has stated tht it appeared as if in the end (of life) the surface of the ocean was in storm. But Krishna did not have any fear of the force on seeing them. (2132)

His bow was shining among the block of elephants as if the whole world had been split in two. He had killed the Bak demon with rage, and had cut off the head of demon with rage, and had cut off the head of demon Mur in a moment. The block of drunken elephants was advancing like the dark clouds coming together. In between them, the bow of Sri Krishna was shining like the splash of lightning in the clouds. (2133)

Sri Krishan had killed most of them with his revolving wheel, and many were slapped to death by rushing at them. Some of them he had killed by rushing with his mace and attacking them, who were lying fallen on the ground, and were not able to stand up again. Some of them had been cut into pieces with the sword, who were lying cut into pieces at different places. It appeared as if the carpenters had sawed the trees of the jungle into pieces and thrown around. (2134)

Some warriors having fought, had fallen on the ground while some others, on seeing their plight had attacked from the front side and fallen down. The poet Siam has stated that they were not at all frieghtened at heart and were fighting without any fear. They had attacked Krishna with their swords in hand and covering their faces with the shields, without any hesitation. But Krishna had despatched them to hell by striking only one arrow at them (killed them). (2135)

When Sri Krishna, becoming furious with rage, had killed all of the warriors, the remaining warriors, on seeing their plight, had run away to safety out of sheer fear. But those of the warriors, who had advanced to attack Sri Krishna, were not left alive. After saying all this and nodding his head, the Raja then (Bhumasur) attacked personally in a sudden move to fight himself. (2136)

When Sri Krishna saw the Raja advancing towards him with his own eyes, he did not stay put there any longer, but came forward to engage him in fight. Challenging the enemy, Krishna then said, "O Man! Wait there, I am goint to kill you now." Then saying this, stretching his bow, he shot an arrow at the chest of the enemy. (2137)

When Sri Krishna had shot an arrow (pointed) pointing it at the enemy, then with the striking of the arrow Bhamasur fell down reeling on the ground, and was killed (killed) immediately. The arrow was not draped in blood, and pierced him through with such a cleverness, just as a Sadhik of Yoga flies to heaven leaving the body, and the sins had not touched him even. (2138)

In the battle, Sri Krishna, getting enraged had killed all the enemies in a moment and then handed over the kingdom to his son and thus alleviated their suffering and made them happy. Then he got married to the sixteen thousand women, and performed some miracles in that town. After giving away many offerings to Brahmins and taking all those princesses, Sri Krishna came back to Dwarka. (2144)

He gave sixteen thousand homes to these women and made them happy and comfortable. By assuming many forms, Krishna gave all those women great comforts and pleasure. All were treated in such a manner as if he was present in each house (all thought, Krishna was living with her only) and none thought he was living with anyone else. So the poet Siam has made it known to all by reading this secret from the Puranas (to all the saints). (2145)

Here the chapter dealing with the episode of killing of Bhumasur, giving away the kingdom to his son, then getting married to sixteen thousand princesses from Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now the episode of gaining victory over (god) Indra and bringing the "Kalap tree" from there begins.

Swaiyya'

After giving a life of comforts to these women, Sri Krishna then went to the Indra-puri (Indra lok). Indra offered some bangles and ear-rings to him as offering, which relieved him of all grief. There Sri Krishna saw a tree (beautiful), which pleased Sri Krishna so much, that he demanded it from Indra, which he refused. As a result Sri Krishna started fighting a battle against Indra. (2146)

Even Indra, getting furious with rage, and organising his force confronted him. The clouds were thundering and flashing (across the sky) and it started raining while the chariots were got ready with decorations. All the twelve suns started shining which has bewildered the gods like Basu and Ravana (who had controlled even Ravana forcing him to run away). Even the clouds without realizing the secret behind it and getting excited surrounded Sri Krishna and attacked him. (2147)

Approaching near Sri Krishna, they forced the elephants to attack him. They were appearing like the Sumer mountain flying, having been provided with wings (sumer mountain was in motion). Which had crushed even the most stubborn men with their teeth (with their burden). Sri Krishna, the benevolent Lord, at first mutilated their trunks, and then beheaded them just as the banana tree is trampled. The blood-stained Sri Krishna was looking gorgeous and grand, as if at the end of the month of phalgun (February) he was playing the game of Basant (spring festival). (2148)

When Sri Krishna started fighting fiercely with more fury against the enemy, then most of their warriors got killed (were without life) when they heard the (drum) powerful song of Sri Krishna. The poet has described the beauty of the scene as if a youth was revolving the ring (ghumani) with force. (2149)

Whosoever confronted Sri Krishna was not allowed to go back alive. Then having gained victory over Indra and the twelve suns, Sri Krishna blew his conch shell. Then Sri Krishna said, "O Kalap Tree! You accompany me to my place. Thus taking the tree, Sri Krishna sounded these words to all, thus Sri Krishna left that place alongwith the tree. The poet Siam has detailed the whole episode in a poetry form. (2150)

Sri Krishna alongwith the tree, came to Rukmani's place. The houses studed with rubies, even made Brahma enamoured with their beauty. That episode was then related to all those women by Sri Krishna and the same story has been described by the poet Siam in a poetry form, which all should listen with love. (2151)

Hence the chapter of winning over Indra, and bringing the kalap tree alongwith in Krishnavtar from Sri Dasam Sakand puran dealing with Bachittar Natak episode is completed.

Now the episode mockery of Kahna with Rukmani begins.

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna then told his spouse (Rukmani) that he used to dine (take his food) at the house of milkmen. "O beautiful lady! Listen. From that day onwards, I was called the salesman of milk (or milk made articles like curd etc). or milkman (dairyman). When king Jarasandh had attacked me alongwith his army I had fled away, as I had no patience left. So what should one say to you, foolish person like you, who had married an ordinary person like me." (2153)

Rukmani told her maid -

'I have thought to myself deeply, as I did not realize that Krishna could behave like this to me and would say these words that I should go away to marry someone else. Now it heboves me to die here only as I do not want to live any more, and surely is not good (suitable) for me that I will stay with my spouse (husband) with a stubborn attitude and die burning (in the fire of his separation). (2154)

The spouse of Sri Krishna then thought (being worried), to herself that it was the right decision to die now. The poet Siam has stated that Rukmani was thinking, that Sri Krishna had used such harsh words about her, so feeling dizzy Rukmani fell down on the ground being enraged and could not control herself completely. The poet has described the beauty (praise) of this scene as if a tree had fallen due to the gusty winds snapping it. (2155)

It was due to your moral belief that I had smashed Kansa, by holding him (head) from the hair, onto the ground; it was the strength of your moral character which helped me to destroy the forces of Jarasandh in a moment; and it was due to your moral strength that I could kill Bhumasur. I had only cut a joke with you, but you thought in your mind as true." (2157)

Rukmani then said-

Swaiyya'

When Rukmani (the wife) heard the words of her beloved (Krishna), then she forgot all about her pain and anguish with her head bowed down, the wife said further, "O Lord! I have committed a mistake so please pardon me for this act, and she praised Sri Krishna immensely, which cannot he put down in poetry form. Then she said smilingly, "O Sri Krishna! I could not follow your joke even." (2158)

The poet Siam has described the episode of Rukmani's grace with great interest and affection (of heart). The further episode is worth listening with more love and interest. (2159)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

All the wives of Sri Krishna were mad to give birth to ten sons each and one daughter each, which brought joy and relief to all in increased measure. The poet Siam has stated that all the children were resembling Sri Krishna in appearance and all were wearing yellow scarves on the shoulders. The benevolent Sri Krishna had come on the Earth to see this worldly drama and he performed such acts. (2160)

The poet Siam has said that Sri Krishna had thought in his mind about his wish regarding the marriage of his grand son (Rukamani's brother). Rukami had one beautiful daughter and he (Sri Krishna) had made all preparations for the marriage (of his grandson) with this daughter (of Rukami). Rukami had made a vermallion mark on the forehead of Anrudh and after meeting the brahmins carried out recitation of Vedas. Then taking Sri Krishna, his wife and Balram with him they all proceeded towards the site of marraige to watch the miracle (of marriage). (1261)

Chopaiee

When Sri Krishna reached that town there was lof of fun and frolic. then Rukamani Sri Rukami (her brother), both the brother and sister felt greatly relieved and comforted. (1262)

The marriage of Anrudh was performed with great pomp and show. Sri Krishna himself tied the sehra (garlands) on his forehead. On the other hand Rukmi had hatched a plan of gambling and invited Balram for the game. (2163)

The poet Siam has stated that Rukmi started the game plan of gambling with Balram. All the kings seated there, also joined in the game and put lot of money in stake at gambling. All the chances went in favour of Balram, but Sri Krishna announced that Rukmi had won the chances. Sri Krishna, alongwith others, made fun of his brother, as a result Balram was greatly upset and enraged. (2164)

Chopaiee

Thus Krishna made fun of Balram annoying him, so that he became furious with rage. So he got up and took his mace in the hands and gave a good beating to all the Rajas there. (2165)

With great ardent desire he beat the Rajas, so that the Rajas were lying unconscious on the ground and were soaked in blood. It appeared as if they were drunk and playing Basant festival they had fallen down. (2166)

Balram was looking as mighty Shiva was moving around on the dooms day, or Yama (god of death) with his staff had come there while Balram was looking graceful like that. (2167)

From the other side Rukmi also stood up with his mace and was greatly agitated with rage. He did not run away, rather he stood there confronting him, and started fighting with Balram. (2168)

One person was laughing with his teeth showing out, whom Balram happened to see with his eyes, and leaving Rukmi alone, jumped on him with a challenge. (2170)

Swaiyya'

Balram took up his mace and broke all his teeth with it, and pulled out his mostaches, and he started bleeding profusely. The poet Siam has stated that he killed many other warriors with increased enthusiasm. Later he started fighting against Rukmi and saying, "I will kill you," he continued the fight with greater zeal. (2171)

The poet Siam has stated that Balram attacked Rukmi, getting furious with rage, with his hair standing upright, and taking his mighty mace, while from the other side Rukmi also came forward and the battle was raging fiercely. Both warriors, being wounded, then lay on the ground unconsious. (2172)

Finally Rukmi got tired of fighting, when Balram suddenly made another strike but Rukmi thwarted this attack in the middle, and taking his mace he was also furious with rage. The poet Siam has stated that the warrior saved this attack with the mace striking the other's mace. (2175)

The poet Siam has stated that Balram struck again with his mace, when he realized that opponent had saved his first strike, with great fury. This one struck Rukmi's head, and he was completely out of sense, and his body fell down on the ground with dizziness and finaly died (went to Yama's hell). (2176)

Balram, surrounding Balram from all ten sides, shouting jeers without being fearful of him. It appeared as if seeing the burning lamp at night, all the moths had attacked it without having the slightest fear at heart. (2177)

They started a battle royal, being enraged and were fighting with Balram. Krishna also heard that his brother was having a fight against his wife's brothers. So Krishna then called his family members and all were pondering over it. Forgetting everything else, Krishna also attacked suddenly, coming to the help of his brother. (2178)

In the meantime, Sri Krishna being furious had reached the battle scene, and saw the wounded Balram and the dead Rukmi. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna saw some other wounded Rajas also lying there. When the Raja had made Rudra as his Kotwal (protector) then the teachings of religion were being spread, the talk of sins stopped and the Raga's praises had spread out throughout the land. All the enemies were controlled by the trident and no other enemy, took courage for confrontation. The poet Siam has stated that the subjects were enjoying all comforts of life in the world. (2186)

Due to the glory of Rudra, all the enemies were suppressed and no other enemy could raise his head (could rebel). The poet Siam has stated that many great Rajas, having presented enough punitive tax (fine) bowed at his feet (accepted his supremacy). But the Raja did not realize that all this power was not his, though he took it to be his own might. Then he felt his arms had become powerful and he went to Rudra for getting a blessing in war (to be successful). (2187)

Sortha

The fool did not appreciate the secret and with a view to get blessings for war, he went to Shiva. Then all his penance went to waste, just as with the heat of the sun, the sand also becomes heated up. (2188)

The Raja told Rudra-

Swaiyya'

The Raja, bowing his head with great reverance and love, said to Rudra, "O Rudra! Whichever enemy I go to attack, no one raises his head in opposition, so I am keenly interested in waging war (I am looking forward). I have come to you to seek this blessing that someone should come forward to fight against me. (2189)

Then Rudra told the Raja -

Chopaiee

Hearing these words, Shiva became furious with rage and told him in these words. "When your blag (banner) would fall down, then some warrior would come forward to fight with you." (2190)

Swaiyya'

Being enraged, when Shiva told these words to the Raja, he did not realize the (secret) warning behind these words. But he followed that whatever he had asked for (wanted), he had been given (gained his wish). He felt greatly delighted and was showing his prowess all around. The poet Siam has stated that Raja, with thousand arms, being elated came back home. (2191)

He had one daughter. She saw one dream during the night that a person, more beautiful than the god of love (kam) with great charm had come to her home. She enjoyed great sensuous pleasure with him in his company, thus feeling greatly satisfied and pleased. The poet Siam has stated that she got up with a sudden shock, but on not finding her lover there, she felt greatly depressed and afflicted. (2192)

On waking up she started crying and wailing and felt greatly pained at heart. She started moving in the courtyard like a mad person, and was getting worried about her spouse in her mind. It seemed, as if she was under the control of a ghost, or was in love with someone, or she had taken some deceptive drung. She started saying, "O friend! To-day I have seen my beloved just now." (2193)

On saying these words, she fell down unconscious on the ground and was almost senseless. The poet Siam has stated that she fell down unconscious on the ground, just as a snake had bitten her. It appeared as if her end (of life) had come near, as she had seen the beloved in her sleep. In the meantime, her girl friend, named Chitra Rekha, came to her place. (2194)

Chopaiee

When she told her condition to the friend, then Chitar Rekha also got worried (about her). So Chitar Rekha thought to herself (in her mind) "If she would continue to live then only I will survive. Whatever efforts (action) I now, make, let me try one on her (to revive her)." (2195)

The friend, feeling helpless, told her that whatever remedy she knew, should be tried on her immediately. (2197)

Swaiyya'

On hearing her words, she created fourteen worlds, and wrote the names of human beings, animals, gods, demons, alongwith their forms on the wall (painted there). When she showed all the paintings by holding her arm, then she reached the spot where there was a picture of Krishna at Dwarka, and there was a picture of the enemy of Sambhar (Anrudh) painted there, on seeing which she lowered her head with downcast eyes and seeing this painting she said, "O friend! This is the picture of my true lover (beloved), whom I have attained." (2199)

Swaiyya'

Chitralekha became a vulture on hearing these words, and started flying, thus reaching Dwarka finally. The poet Siam has stated that she went to the place where Sri Krishna's grandson was abiding and stealthily reaching him told the whole story to him, "That a woman was greatly in love with you and had sent me to fetch you to meet her. So please make haste to go there. I am all sacrifice to you (I thank you) that you have solved all my worries, ending my (mind's) dilema." (2201)

The poet Siam has stated that on relating the whole story, she showed her true form (Chitara rekha). So Anarudh left a great desire tto meet and sec the moment, who was so much enamoured with him. He took his quiver, tied it to his waist, and taking his bow, he got ready to proceed and taking the woman emissary started for the place to bring that woman. (2202)

Couplet

The (female) emissary was delighted immensely and took Anarudh alongwith her and reached the place (town) where Ukha was residing. (2203)

Sortha

That clever woman then made arrangements so that the woman and her lover could meet. Then Ukha and Anarudh both enjoyed sensuous pleasure on meeting and felt greatly elated and relieved. (2204)

Swaiyya'

Then both the man and woman got greatly excited with emotions and enjoyed four types of sensuous pleasures (four postures). The poet Siam has stated that they performed all sorts of sensuous postures as mentioned in kok Shastra. Then Anarudh said to that woman (Ukha) while laughing slightly and with a twinkle of the eyes (wink), "O beautiful girl! Just as you have become mine, I have also become yours (just as you had surrendered yourself to me, I am also equally at your disposal). (2205)

Then Raja Banasur's (Sahasurbahu) beautiful banner (flag) had fallen on the ground, which he also noticed. Thus he realized within his heart, that the moment of the blessing of Rudra, given to him had arrived. In the meantime someone gave the news to him that in her daughter's apartments some male (man) had come. On hearing these words, the Raja became furious with rage and left (for that place). (2206)

On coming, he took up his arms (weapons) and got more agitated with rage, and got more furious. The poet Siam has stated that he waged a war in his daughter's palace against Sri Krishna's grandson. When Anarudh had fallen down unconsious on the ground, then he (Raja) caught hold of him. By sounding the drum beats, showing his prowess to all, bringing him alongwith (Anarudh) the Raja came back home. (2207)

By chaining Sri Krishna's grandson, Raja returned to his palace. On the other hand, Narad went to Sri Krishna and related to him the whole episode. "O Krishna! Why are you sitting here quitely? Start immediately alongwith your Yadava forces with full preparation. Thus hearing these words, Sri Krishna became furious with rage and left (for that place). All of them were enraged immensely, and took up their weapons including their swords whose splendour was beyond any description. (2208)

On hearing Narad's talk, Sri Krishna had ordered his whole army to get ready and with his force reached the place where Raja Banasur abided. (2209)

Swaiyya'

On hearing about Sri Krishna's arrival there, the Raja consulted his ministers, who gave their advice. One minister said, "You should give away your daughter to him," but the Raja did not agree to him. The second one said, "You had gained the blessings from Shiva for waging war and I know that you had done this senseless act (of seeking blessing for war)." The third minister said, "You should leave all this and by giving him (Krishna) the punitive tax, make him forget about your blunder, and Sri Krishna had vowed to take away all these" (his grandson alongwith your daughter). (2210)

The minister said, "O Raja! If you would agree, I want to say something, which you should listen with attention. You should bow your head to Krishna alongwith your daughter and Anarudh. O Raja! We would request you by bowing to you that you should listen to our advice and never try to wage war against Shiam (Krishna)." The poet Siam has stated that "If you do not wage a war against Sri Krishna, then you would rule the world all the time." (2211)

"When Sri Krishna, with all fury, would hold his 'Sarang bow', then tell us, where is the warrior who would dare to confront him. If anyone were to fight, being stubborn, against him, he would be killed immediately (sent to Yama's hell in a moment). After cutting off all your arms, and leaving you with only two arms, he would let you off alive (through his mercy)." (2212)

The Raja did not accept the advice of his minister and showed his great power and glory. He took up his weapons and was very proud among his warriors. All the forces which he possessed, were called by the Raja at his place. After worshipping Shiva, and showing off his might, he went ahead to take up cudgels against Sri Krishna. (2213)

From one side Krishna was shooting his arrows, while from the other side, the Raja with thousand arms was also striking his arrows. From one side all the Yadavas joined in the battle while on the other side, all the Raja's warriors also started fighting, and both were attacking each other's enemy. The poet Siam has stated the beauty of the scene as such. It appeared that the warriors had joined Basant festivities and celebrations in the month of Phalgun (February). (2214)

Some warriors were fighting with swords, while some others were using spears in the battle. The poet Siam has stated that some warriors, getting highly excited with rage, were fighting with daggers, while some other warriors were getting ready with their bows and arrows. Both the Raja (Sehasurbahu) and Sri Krishna on their sides were enjoying viewing the battle scene. (2215)

The poet Siam has stated that whichever warrior dared to fight with Krishna was killed and felled on the ground with one arrow (striking him) only. According to the poet Siam, if any warrior tried to attack him with bow and arrow, he would not be able to go back alive to his home. (2216)

The poet Siam has stated that whenever Sri Krishna had fought against an enemy, then all the engaged enemy warriors who confronted him, their flesh was shared among vultures and jackals only. He had killed many infantry chariot ridden troops, elephants and horses and none was left alive on the battle field. The gods were also praising Sri Krishna for his valour, that he had destroyed all indestructible forces of enemy. (2217)

All those still alive, were frightened and all such warriors had fled away from the battle field. They all went to the place where Bar'asur was standing and bowed to him. All these warriors had lost their patience and were awfully terrified. They told the Raja to run away from the battle field, as none would be left alive by confronting Sri Krishna. (2218)

When the Raja was involved in great battle then he looked upto Shiva as his supporter. he thought to himself whether he should go and fight against the helper of saints, Sri Krishna. So he took up all his weapons and left for the place to wage war against Krishna. Coming there, both fought each other at a place, about which I am going to describe the episode now. (2219)

The poet Siam has stated that when Rudra assumed a horible form and sounded the war drum beats, then no warrior could confront him, as all had fled away, and none could stay in position. Balram then frightened Barasur and his suppoters (enemy), getting furious with rage. The poet Siam has stated that then Shiva came to fight against Sri Krishna. (2220)

Sri Krishna managed to save all the strikes (attacks) made by Shiva. The poet Siam has stated that then Sri Krishna launched attacks on Shiva, by seeing him, both fought with each other in many ways, and all the gods came to witness that fight. Then Sri Krishna, getting annoyed, struck with his mace, so that Shiva fell down on the ground. (2221)

Chopaiee

When Sri Krishna had wounded Rudra (Shiva) and he had fallen on the ground unconscious. Then he got bewildered and frieghtened and did not pick up his bow. By now he had realized that Sri krishna was truly the Lord himself. (2222)

Sortha

On seeing the valour of Sri Krishna, Shiva had given up his fury. Then Shiva fell at the feet of Sri Krishna, clasping both his feet (and sought his pardon). (2223)

Swaiyya'

On seeing the plight of Rudra, the Raja himself came forward to fight. The poet Siam has stated that with his one thousand arms, he started shooting arrows like a shower of rain on Sri Krishna. Sri Krishna would make all the cluster of arrows ineffective on its path itself which were coming from the enemy and taking his Sarang bow in hand, he wounded the enemy by his stream of arrows shot at the enemy. Then Sri Krishna, being enraged fully and taking the Sarang bow and showing his great might, he started fighting against (Sehasarbahu) the enemy with thousand arms. The poet Siam has stated that through his great valour, Sri Krishna killed many other warriors as well. Then reducing the arms of the Raja to two only, he left him alone in the battle-field. (2225)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

You tell me, If anyone with thousand arms existed in the the world ever before. Then furthermore, the Raja had collected so much wealth at his place. O saints! Listen with attention. With so much deceit with Shiva, could anyone he protected against attack, after all this happening? Though Shiva' had blessed the Raja like this, finally whatever the Lord wished (liked) was bound to happen. (2226)

Then with down cast eyes, Sri Krishna stood there and would not think of fighting any more, so the Raja got a chance to run away from there, so he fled away, and there was no further fighting. (2228)

Then the Raja told his warriors-

Swaiyya'

Having been wounded badly, the Raja addressed his warrirs, saying "That whether he attacked, with fury, no warrior could confront him." On hearing my roar, no other warrior had the courage to come and face me with his weapons. Sri Krishna, in spite of all this, dared to fight against me, as such he was really a true and mighty warrior." (2229)

When the Raja with thousand arms had fled away, then Sri Krishna did not continue the fighting. Seeing his two arms left with him, the Raja felt greatly depressed at heart. Whosoever had sung praises of Sri Krishna, had won laurels in the world also. That is why, with the benevolence of saints, the poet Siam has described his (Krishna's) praises like this. (2230)

Then Shiva, alongwith his musicians, being greatly enraged, came there. The poet Siam has stated that warriors with great fury, then stood facing Sri Krishan again. With the beat of drums, and taking up their weapons like bow and arrows, swords, maces and spears came up in great fury. But Sri Krishna sent them to hell (killed them) in a moment. (2231)

Some of them were killed by Sri Krishna with his mace, while some others were killed by the enemy of Sambar (Parduman); some others fought against Balram but were not allowed to go back alive. While some others managed to fight against Sri Krishna, and thus the anger of Sri Krishna cut them into pieces and bits in such a manner that they were not availed of by the valtures or jackals even (were no use to them). (2232)

On seeing such a fierce fighting, Banasur also got furious with rage and patting his two arms, he sounded the war cries (drums) himself. He then attacked with great force (Sri Krishna) just as he had attacked earlier the demon Andhak. The poet has described the praise of the scene as if a lion had come to fight another lion. (2233)

bhed kahiyo. (2236)

When a fierce battle was raging then Shiva, who was having with him a 'fever' (taap), organised, but Sri Krishna knowing this secret sent this "Trembling fever", towards him. Seeing this trembling fever, the taap (ordinary fever) ran away, and could not face the "Trembling fever." The poet has described the beauty of the scene, as if the cloud was flying off on seeing the onslaught of the strong wind. (2234)

Whatever pride and egoism was there in the mind of Shiva, was destroyed by Sri Krishna getting enraged and fighting fiercely. The shower of arrows, in a stream, which Shiva shot, could not ever touch the body of Sri Krishna, and all other musicians with Shiva were also wounded badly with his arrows (Krishna). Then seeing the might of Sri Krishna, Shiva bowed to Sri Krishna and clasped his feet. (2235)

Shiva then said -

Swaiyya'

O Lord! I have done this mean act of fighting with you through my blunder. What is the use of all this fighting against you with such a fury, but my pride has not with-stood your might. Even Sheshnag was singing your praises, and Brahma were defeated by you. Your praises are beyond all of us, and even Vedas have not been able to know your secrets. (2236)

The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

What is the use of showing to the world the garb of an ascetic by having tufts of matted hair on the head what is the use of singing the Lord's praises with both eyes closed; or what is the use of blowing the conch shell while performing Arti and burning incense? The poet has stated that without having true love and regard (for the Lord), who had attained the love of Sri Krishna so far? (2237)

Similarly four-faceted Brahma, or six-faced Kartika or Sheshnag with thousand fangs, all were singing his praises. Narad, Indra, Shiva and Vogas etc. had also sung the praises of Sri Krishna, and even the four Vedas had not realized Lord's secrets. The whole world was trying to seek His secrets but none had so far realized his secrets. The poet Siam has stated that "why do you not say yourself that without developing true love for him, no one had pleased Sri Krishna sofar? (2238)

Shiva bowed at the feet of Sri Krishna saying. "O Krishna! Pray listen to my prayers (request)! I, a slave of yours, am begging for a blessing (of Yours) O benevolent Lord! Now may you bless me with your benediction!" The poet Siam has stated that "by perceiving me you may show your benevolence at least some times. It is all right that you have cut off the arms of Sesharbahn. but please do not kill him." (2239)

Then Sri Krishna told Shiva -

Swaiyya'

"O Rudra! Listen to me. I am going to say a few words, which I would like to share with you. Due to his mistakes, I had to cut off his arms, but nowI have given up my wrathfulness. He calls himself as the grandson of Prahlad and I am considering this fact in my heart. So I have let him off by punishing him only and am not going to kill him. (2240)

Thus getting the Raja pardoned by Sri Krishna, Shiva made the Raja bow to him at his feet, and said, "O Lord! The Raja had through a slip (error) acted like this, so now please give up your anger (wrath) and get your grandson married to his daughter, without having any other misunderstanding in mind. O Krishna! So please, getting Ukha married to Anuradh, you may proceed to your place (with pleasure)." (2241)

"Whosoever hears the praises of Sri Krishna being sung by others and then himself sings his praises, who studies himself and then makes others read and write praises about it, and meditates on Sri Krishna at all times whether in sleeping, awakened and moving around in the house postures, attains salvation from this worldly ocean of falsehood, "says the poet Siam." Chopaiee

There used to live a Raja named Dig who had assumed the form of a lizzard. All the Yadava children gathered together and started playing with it. When they felt thirsty, then they went towards a well after noticing it. (2243)

There was a lizzard, and they thought of getting it out of the well. They tried but could not succeed to get it out, then all were wondering. (2244)

On hearing the words of Yadavas, Sri Krishna realized the secret of this episode and said with a laugh. "Show me the well, and also where was the lizzard there?" He told them to show him this lizzard. Sri Krishna was following the Yadavas who were in the lead, and all of them reached there and saw the lizzard. On the very sight of Sri Krishna, all his sins were washed away and he was flawless. When Sri Krishna lifted him, he took up his human form (he became a human being). (2246)

Swaiyya'

So he got Salvation in a moment he had meditated on Sri Krishna for a moment even. Even Ganka, who took up a parrot and tried to teach the name of Narayan to him, had attained Salvation in no time. So whosoever remembered the Lord in his mind, why should he not gain Salvation? (would attain salvation) So why the lizzard could not attain salvation, whom Sri Krishna had touched with his hand? After giving salvation to Raja Dig, Sri Krishna came back home and Balram went away to Gokal. On reaching Gokal Balram went to Nand and bowed at his feet. Thus Nand felt very happy and relieved on meeting him. (2252)

Swaiyya'

Then Balram after paying respects to Nand, came to the house of Jasodha. The poet has said that on seeing her Balram bowed his head to Jasodha. Then Jasodha embraced him and told him what she had thought in the mind, whether Krishna had thought of our welfare also. Thus she told her son Balram, while weeping all the time. (2253)

The poet Siam has stated they embellished themselves with nose rings (mark on forehead) and ornaments alongwith beautiful robes, and with antimoney in their charming eyes and showed their beauty like lightning of the body. Without having any hesitation of the mother, father or brother they came and asked. O Balram! We pay our respects to you. Pray tell us something about the dark coloured charming (person) resembling dark clouds. (2254)

Then bidding farewell to Nand and Jasodha and riding his chariot, Balram left that place. After passing through many lands, mountains and rivers etc. he came near his town. Sri Krishna heard from someone that Balram had reached near Raja Ugarsain's place, so Sri Krishna, riding his chariot, came to (welcome) receive Balram (his brother) with great love and affection. (2259)

Couplet

Both the brothers then met by clasping and hugging each other, thus having great joy and peace. They came home, drinking wine and making merry on the way. (2260)

Here the chapter (of Krishnavtar) dealing with the episode of return of Bal bhadar (Balram) from Gokal in Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now the episode of sending his emissary by Singral (to know about) for "I am Krishna" begins.

Both the brothers were very happy and thus came back home. 'Now I am going to relate the episode of Parodrak (Sringal)." (2261)

The Raja of Singral sent his emissary to Sri Krishna asking him for the reason of saying, "I am Krishna", and why he had announced it. The poet Siam has stated tht the Raja told Krishna, "You have made (created) a deceitful position by saying that "You are only a milkman. How do you call yourself Master of Gokal? Are you not afraid of all this? Either you accept the advice of my emissary, or else I am coming with my army to attack." (2262)

Sortha

Sri Krishna did not agree to the emissary and the emissary went back to the Raja and informed his master accordingly. So the Raja launched an attack on Sri Krishna. (2263)

Swaiyya

Singral made arragements for the army of Kanshi Raja and other Rajas as well to take part. On this side Sri Krishna called Balram and got his forces ready and collecting all the Yadavas came to wasge a war against singral (who called himself Krishna). The poet Siam has stated that the warriors from both sides came to the battle field. (2264)

Then both the forces found themselves confronting each other. The beauty of this scene has been described by poet Siam, as if the rains (clouds) of doomsday had collected together. Sri Krishna then came out of his army and addressed this message to both the forces. "Both the forces would stay put at their positions, as in the battle field it will be a duel only as only both of us will fight. (2265)

"O Warriors! Listen to me, all of you, warriors. This person had called himself8 "Ghanshyam', and I am also called Ghan Shyam. So Singral has come here with his forces and I have also reached here with my forces. Now I am telling you the truth, why should the forces fight his battle? Both the armeis should stay put in their positions and watch the fun." The poet Siam has stated "that it behoves us to fight out with each other only (and decide)." (2266)

Accepting Sri Krishna's suggestion both the armies were only watching the battle as both the Krishna's came forward like lions to fight it out (like a duel). (2267)

It appeared as if two drunken elephants had advanced to fight against each other or two lions had arrived. At the end of life, god of death and Shiva were there to fight, or two mountains having wings had come there to battle or both were the clouds of the doomsday or two oceans had got enraged vigorouslsy. The poet had thought in his mind as if both were two Rudras, filled with wrath and fury. (2268)

It seemed as if it were a fight between falsehood and Truth, or between a stone and glass, or fight between mercury and fire, or a battle between leaves and waves. Or it were a fight between knowledge and allurement (infatuation), or between discretion and indescretion, or between an ascetic and anti-brahmin, or a weakling fighting against a warrior. Or it were a fight between modesty and lust, cold against sunshine, sin against (Ram's) Lord's Name, or deceit against honesty; Or it were a comparison between miserliness (thrift) and alms-givings, between wrath (anger) and honour. The poet Siam has stated that it was felt similar to the above comparison as one Krishna was fighting with another Krishna (Singral). (2269)

There was a fierce battle, then Sri Krishna took out his Sudarshan wheel. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna then challenged the enemy, saying, "O Singral! Now I am going to kill you. Uttering these words, Sri Krishna let go the Sudarshan wheel, and striking the enemy, cut off his head. It appeared as if the potter, with his thread (wire) had separated the pot from the revolving (potter's) wheel. (2270)

On seeing the killing of Singral, there was a Raja of Kanshi standing there, who attacked Krishna immediately. The poet Siam has stated that he fought a vigorous battle against Sri Krishna. There was lot of bloodshed, when Sri Krishna again let go his Sudarshan wheel. Just as the head of first enemy was cut off, in the same manner, his head was also removed (from his body). (2271)

When before the very eyes of both the armies, Sri Krishna had killed both the enemies, being enraged fully, then all were filled with joy and drums of victory were sounded alongwith clarionets. All the other warriors went away to their places (homes). The poet Siam has stated that flowers were showered from the heavens on Sri Krishna. (2272)

When the enemy forces had fled away, then Sri Krishna came back to his side (army), and all the gods from heaven came and clasped the lotus feet of Sri Krishna. All of than, after circumatnbulating Sri Krishna and burning incense blew their conch shells. The poet Siam has stated that they accepted Sri Krishna as the greatest warrior in their midst. (2273)

On the othe side, the Raja, Dachh (Dakas) went away to his home after paying rich tributes (praising) to Sri Krishna, and Sri Krishna came back to Dwarka. The head of Raja of Kanshi fell down in Kanshi (on the other side), as a result of which the residents of the town felt much grieved and sorrowful. All the people were talking like this, which has been described by the poet Siam as such, the way our Raja had behaved with Sri Krishna he had reaped the reward of his own actions. (2274)

The god Brahma, Narad and Shiva, whom the people of the world worship by offering them flowers, by bowing their heads to them, and then blow the conch shell by burrning incense. the poet Siam has stated that the people, bow to all these gods, who in their turn, bow to Sri Krishna, by singing his praises, but have not been able to find out his secrets so far. (2275)

But the son of the Raja of Kanshi, Sudachhan, had developed great wrathfulness in his mind, saying that he would kill the person who had killed his father. He had made up-his mind that he would kill the killer of his father. So he worshipped Shiva and won his pleasure by singing his praises (drum beats). The poet Siam has stated that he (thought) said, "I shall kill Krishna in a moment, and this blessing he gained from Shiva (by his worship). (2276)

Then Shiva told him that in the battle, if anyone showed disrespect to this idol (by turning its face away), he will not be affected by your power, and he would kill you rather." (2278)

Swaiyya'

The poet Siam has stated that when Shiva had told these things to Sudachh, he started carrying out those functions and was much elated at heart. So he offered rice and ghee to the scarifical fire, as laid down in the Vedas. The fool did not realize the secret (meaning) of what Shiva had told him. (2279)

Then an idol appeared from the fire, which was very horrible looking and was dreadful to look at. Where was the warrior in the world, who could confront this idol. The idol stood erect (up) by holding a mace in hand, and was grinding its teeth with great fury. So everyone thought that now Sri Krishna could not escape death at his hands. (2280)

Swaiyya'

O Krishna! If anyone were to face this idol, would be burnt in a moment. On hearing these words, Sri Krishna got into his chariot and came to face it and started (let go) his revolving wheel. The poet has stated -

Swaiyya'

The poet has stated that if someone had not worshipped and meditated on Sri Krishna and without singing praises of Krishna, had praised someone else. What was the use of worshipping Ganesh or Shiva instead of the Lord (Jagdish) himself? Such a person would not attain Salvation either in this world or the next, but would be wasting his life. (2284)

Here the chapter on the killing of Sudachhan, the Raja's son, from Bachittar Natak is completed (by the idol).

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna, after defeating the Rajas in battle, had left them scot free, who had never faltered in battle. Then he had cut off thousand arms of the Raja, from whom the whole Universe (fourteen lands) was frightened. The houses of brahmins were erected out of gold, who used to seek alms for their living. Then he had saved the honour of Daropadi. There could be none other than Sri Krishna, who could have done all this. (2285)

Here the episode of killing the monkey by Balbhadar is completed. Now the episode of the marriage of the daughter of Raja of Gajpur by Sambar begins.

Swaiyya'

The marriage of the daughter of Raja of Gajpur was announced by Daryodhana with great pomp and show. All the kings of the land were invited to witness the marriage ceremony. The son of blind (Dhrirashtra) king had arranged for the marriage celebration. This news had spread to the town of Dwarka also. A son of Krishna and Jambvati named Samb also came there for attending the marriage. (2289)

Then he caught hold of the arm of the Raja's daughter and forced her onto his chariot. If any warrior came forward in her support, he was killed with one arrow only. When the king challenged him, then six warriors from the force of chariot drawn army attacked him with a great force. The poet Siam has stated that a fierce battle then followed. (2290)

Arjuna, Bhisham, Daronacharya, Kirpacharya and Kirpi's son (Asthoathama) were furious at heart, and then Karan also accompanied them, who was equally agitated and was wearing the coat of iron (protective cover) on the body. The poet Siam has stated that he was looking glorious in the crowd of these warriors, just as the sun shines among the other gods, and he was also looking gorgeous in the battle-field. (2291)

Where the battle was being fought without any reservations, spears were being used without any reservations and spears were being used from both sides. The wounded soliders were running away just as they were running having morsels of food from their homes. The warriors were moving around, as if they were drunk by consuming wine in plenty. The bows and arrows were like wine containers and the arrows being shot in the battle were the wine serving pots. (2292)

Taking his bow in hand, Samb had killed many warriors there; some had lost both the feet being cut off, while some others had their heads chopped off. The poet Siam has depicted the beauty of fleeing warriors as if sins were running away from the virtues of congregation of Sadhus (saints). (2293)

Some had lost their arms, while some warriors had got their hands mutilated. Some had been cut into two pieces while some charioteers were thrown off their chariots ad killed. Some warriors had their heads chopped off but the trunks were still standing erect. They were bleeding profusely. The scene has been described by the poet Siam as if in thes garden of warriors, many fountains were throwing water around. (2294)

When the son of Krishna had killed many warriors, as desired by him, then many warriors fled away, never to return again. Some were wounded and were lying breathless. Many, without their weapons, were bowing in submission so as to save their lives. Some others were standing silently and entreating for their safety. (2295)

Sri Krishna's son had fought a valiant battle, which was not seen before, or no one had fought earlier. The six warriors, who came forward, to fight with him, were no less in their strength and matched his prowess. All of them joined together and attacked Sri Krishan's son and would not let him go. Being furious with rage and challenging him, they caught hold of him by his hair. (2296)

So Daroyodhana was very happy. But on the other side Krishna and Balram heard this news and Basudev was very much annoyed on hearing this news. The poet Siam has stated that he kept on twisting his moustaches (in great frustration). (2298)

Baldev then said-

Chopaiee

Send someone (emissary) to find out the position of samb and get me the news about my grandson soon. So Balram was sent there, and he reached there (in due course) after some time. (2299)

Swaiyya'

On getting the approval of the father, Balram came to Gajapur and said, "O Blindman's son (Daryodhana)! Leave this Samb. He gave this message." On hearing this, the Raja (Daryodhana) was furious with rage and said, "Basudev, sitting in his own (house) place, has given this order." Balram then pulled down the whole town with his hoe so he got very much frightened, and so he brought his daughter for (handing over) presenting to him. (2300)

When he (Narad) went to the second house, then he saw Krishna there also. Then Narad went to another house, and Krishna was present there also. 'Rishi got amused and said that he had seen Krishna in all the palaces (houses). The poet Siam has described this episode in the Granth. So Rishi Narad had realized in the mind that Sri Krishna was an embodiment of the Lord Himself. (2303)

Sri Krishna was performing many functions, somewhere he was singing, and at some palaces he was fondling the children (boys) with affection and elsewhere he was fighting battles against the warriors and somewhere he was wielding the sword. In Dwarka, Sri Krishna was playing many roles, which no one could readily define or understand its vastness. (2304)

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna gets up early in the morning, then takes his bath and meditates on the Lord, then at the time of sunset he performs the evening prayers (Sandhya) and then recites cantos (mantras) with jalajali (burning lamps). Then he would recite the (Durga sapatsati) prayer of seven hundred Salokas (cantos) and never misses this routine of daily prayers. Then why should any human being not perform these duties, when Krishna himself was doing these functions daily? (2306)

Krishna, after taking bath, would wear nice clothes and then would come out by applying scent to his clothes. Then he occupies his seat on the throne and imparts justice with due consideration. Then the noble father of Sukdev palates Sri Krishna by his exegesis of scriptures. Then an emissary came and informed him about some incident which has been depicted by the poet as follows. (2307)

"O Krishna! The king (Jarasandh), after his defeat, has again started showing off his strength and is going to attack third time with a huge army of three-faceted forces and finally make Krishna flee away, so that he could no longer stay in Mathura." Whatever suggestion Udhav had given about the killing of the enemy, was accepted by Sri Krishna in toto. So Sri Krishna arranged and organised a huge force comprising expert charioteers, horse riders, and elephant-riders, all of them then enjoyed by consuming opium, hemp (bhang) and wine. To convey this message, Narad was sent away first and mentioned that the whole function should be completed with the help of Udhav. (2311)

Then Bhim was sent to the East, and Sehdev to the South side, to the west was sent Nukal and thus the RajaYidishtra had arranged for the Yagna in this manner. Then Arjuna went towards the North side, so that no one was left alive, whosoever tried to fight against him. The poet Siam has stated that Arjuna, alongwith a huge force, and taking his bow, came to meet the master (king) of Delhi. (2315)

After gaining victory in the East, Bhim Sain also came back and Arjuna came from the North after gaining victory there. Sehdev also came from the south after winning there feeling greatly powerful in mind over his success. From the west, after winning there, Nukal also bowed to Yudishtra. So all of them said, that they had gained victories over all others, but Jarasandh could not be defeated. (2316)

Then Sri Krishna told to Arjuan and Bhim that they should assume the form of a brahmin and Krishna would also take the form of a brahmin, as he cannot wait at the back (being outside the battle). "I feel at heart that we should take him aside and shower our desire for a duel, and carry a sword in hand." After saying so, Krishna also assumed the form (garb) of a brahmin, which no one could make out." (2318)

When they went to Raja Jarasandh in the garb of brahmins, he recognized them. The Raja saw their strong and heavy arms and their manners of Kashatriyas so that he could easily make out. He said that he was the same person who had fought against him so many times (twenty-three times) and whose capital was Dwarka. So the Raja came to know all their secrets and said that it was the master of Gokal only who had come in diguise. (2319)

So Sri Krishna then made the Raja hear, when he said, "You had fled away from Krishna twenty three times, while Krishna had to flee only once." Inspite of all these defeats, you are still called a warrior only. Now I had thought in my mind that we should start a battle against you, a Kashatriya, by taking up the garb of a brahmin. (2320)

The Raja Bal had measured his size and given it to Vishnu. All were trying to dissuade him but he would not agree. He had remarked that the human body was also an article (thing), as when a person like the Lord was asking (begging) for a certain thing, then it would not be worth while to offer anything other than the body itself. Listen Ram fought the battle and after killing Ravana, handed over the kingdom to Vibhusham only, and did not take it back. So we now are asking you, O Raja! for something. Now why have you become quiet, by taking a hesitant attitude of complete silence. (2321)

See, Brahma had offered (given) a son to the sun, but he was not frightened at heart. Raja Harichand had become a slave to the out caste but never felt ashamed at the son's cremation. Madh and Ketab had offered their cut-off heads to Vishnu and had no hesitation in mind at all. The person, who had killed Bakasur was now asking for (begging for a duel) a war (battle) with him. "Have you lost your strength now?" (2322)

The sun might rise from the west (which could be heard as possible and the river Ganga might flow against its direction (in the opposite direction) or Hari Chand might waver from his truthfulness and mountains may move away from the Earth at a distance. Even the lions may dread the deer and get back position and even a heavy elephant might fly upwards towards heavens Krishna told Arjuna that (when all these things become possible) then the Raja Jarasandh, out of fear, shall not fight a battle. Jarasandh then said -

The poet Siam has stated that when Arjuna was told like this by Sri Krishna, then Raja recognized him, that he was Krishna only, and the other two were Arjuan and Bhim (The Raja said to himself), "That Krishna had once fled away from him, Arjuna was a child now while the third was Bhim only. Krishna had run away once (from him), that Arjuna was not yet grown up so let me fight it out with Bhim only. Saying all this, the Raja got up (ready) for a battle with him, without any fear or hesitation. (2324)

The Raja had a heavy mace at his place, which he gave to Bhim and sent for another mace for himself, so one mace was in the hands of Bhim and another in the Raja's hands. They used to fight during day time and would take rest at night with full comfort. Thus the poet has described the episode of these two warriors, after thinking it over in his mind. (2325)

Bhiw would strike with mace at the Raja, and the Raja in turn, would strike Bhim with mace. Both warriors were fighting with anger and wrathfulness, just as two lions fight in the jungle. Both were fighting a battle (duel) but would not retrace back. It appeared as if they were sharing their friendship there. The poet has thought in his mind as if two clever players were engaged in the game of fencing (with clubs). (2326)

After the duel (fight) went on for twenty-seven days, then Raja Jarasandh had won and Bhim felt weakened in strength, then Krishna passed on his own strength (power) to Bhim and exhorted him to continue the fight. Then Krishna took a straw in hand and made it into two pieces. Bhim got the hint, and he also has described this episode like this. (2327)

Swaiyya'

After killing Jarasandh Krishna then went to the place, where some Rajas were chained and kept under captivity. On the very sight of Krishna, these Rajas felt greatly relieved and all their sufferings were over, whereas Sri Krishna's eyes were filled with a sense of guilt (shame) or bashfulness. All their shackles were removed in a moment. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna was full of benevolence and arranged to leave all of them scot free. (2328)

After removing their restrictions, Sri Krishna told them, "Feel fully relieved and delighted at heart and forget about all your afflictions and worries. The poet Siam has stated that you may go back to your areas and take control of your kingdom and look after all your properties and wealth, and told them to go back to their own lands. (2329)

After removing their shackles, Sri Krishna said, like this, to which the Rajas said, "O Lord! The kingdom has no value for us now, we will meditate on you only. Now we have made up our mind to worship you alone. The poet Siam has stated that, "Sri Krishna told them to go back and rule over their lands, and take all these benedictions. So they agreed to his proposal and said to Sri Krishna, "Please keep a watch on our welfare and well being always." (2330)

Swaiyya'

After bowing to Sri Krishna, all the Rajas went back to their homes, and Sri Krishna came to Delhi, Bhim told all the secrets of his getting power from Krishna and then killing of the enemy to everybody there. Then they started the Rajsu Yagna by calling brahmins, with great pomp and show. The Yagna started when Sri Krishna sounded the drum of victory with great honour. (2331)

Then Yudishtra addressed the assembly -

Swaiyya

Collecting together an assembly of Brahmins and Kashtriyas, Yudishtra said, "First of all whom should we worship? Who is the warrior here, whom we should apply the tilak (sign) of saffron and rice on his forehead. Then Sehdev shouted out, "Sri Krishna only deserves this honour, so tilak should be applied to him." The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna was the only true Lord on whom we should shower all the honours, and (we should be a sacrifice to him) he deserved all our praise. (2332)

Then Sehdev said

Swaiyya'

"We should always serve and worship him and should not waste our time in other wasteful functions. We should meditate on him alone, leaving, aside all worldly and household chores. This secret has been divulged by various Puranas, thoughts of holy men, and Vedas.The poet Siam has stated that why do we not first of all, apply tilak on his forehead?" (2333)

When Sehdev said such words, then the truth seemed to reveal itself to the mind of Raja (Yudishtra). The poet Siam has stated that the Raja accepted Sri Krishna as the True Lord in his heart. Taking the saffron and rice in hand, a tilak (mark) was applied on the forehead of Sri Krishna as per Vedic rites with the recitation of mantras (cantos). Shishsupal was also seated there, and he felt greatly enraged in mind. (2334)

So Shishupal said -

Swaiyya'

"What is the value of this man before a warrior like me being present in this assembly, whereas you have cared to apply the tilak on his forehead leaving me aside? He had consumed milk and cried in the company of milkmen in Gokal town. Now listen further. Being afraid of his enemies, he had fled away to Dwarka saving his life. He announced this in the gathering with such words and was furious with rage. (2335)

Then Shishupal, with greater fury in his mind, and addressing the assembly said. He stood up being furious with rage and taking his heavy mace in hand, he said, "He is only a milkman, but calls himself as the king of Yadavas. Then he (Raja) abused him, with his eyes frowned (full) with anger. But Sri Krishna, on hearing these words and remebering the words of his paternal aunt, remained silent. (2336)

Sri Krishna kept the words of his aunt (Kunti) in mind, (fresh) but his mind, not withstanding hundreds of abuses hurled at him, remained cool (without anger). After hearing hundreds of abuses hurled at him, Sri Krishna stood up with great strength, without harbouring any fear of the warriors. Then Sri Krishna held his revolving wheel in his hand. (2337)

Sri Krishna then said -

Swaiyya'

With wheel in hand, Sri Krishna stood up firmly, saying with great fury at heart, "By remembering aunt Kunti's words, I have not killed you, and maintained complete silence. Now if you hurl any more abuses (after this hundred) then you will be inviting your death sentence. All these Rajas, seated here, are watching now, and either you will not remain alive or I will not escape death. (2338)

Shishupal then told Krishna -

Swaiyya'

When that proud Shishupal heard these words, then he got enraged and replied, "O milkman! Will I face death just by your saying so? He said these words, and then added, "If I die fighting before this assembly, then I will feel that my death was nearby (had approached). O Man! Then my story of death will be rampant (known) throughout the four ages (Yugas) and in Vedas and Puranas, as well." (2339)

"So what if you had said by revolving your wheel that you will kill me. O milkman! (dairyman!) Being called a Kashatriya, do you feel that I will run away from this assembly, being afraid of you? O Man! I swear by my mother, father and brother that either I shall kill you or I will die fighting. O Krishna! Having lost Rukmani's hand, the anger is still raging in my mind, and I shall play the final game (gamble) against you to-day. (2340)

When Shishupal talked like this, then Sri Krishna became very furious with rage and he said, "O fool! You want death (you are craving for death) and I am looking to all these people and the sun as my witnesses," and then he took his Sudarshan wheel in the hand, and jumped over the whole assembly. The poet Siam has stated that with the hope (desire) of killing him, he (Krishna) rushed forward. (2341)

From this side Krishna advanced forward, while from the other side Shishupal also stood firmly confronting him. Sri Krishna then let go the wheel, with increased fury and aiming at the enemy. The wheel struck him on the neck, thus cutting off his head, which fell down on the ground. The poet Siam has depicted the beauty of this scene as if some one had thrown out the sun from the sky, with a stroke. (2342)

Swaiyya'

Krishna had cut off the head of Shishupal and was looking with great indignation with both the eyes, and then he said, "Is there any other warrior in this assembly, who would dare to oppose me and fight with me?" Arjuna and Bhim etc. and all the other warriors kept (quiet) silent, as they were greatly frightened. The poet siam was offering his sacrifice to the charming personality of Sri Krishna. (was all praise for him). (2343)

All the power of Shishupal had entered the frame of Krishna (it seemed); The poet Siam has stated that all the mighty warriors could not utter a word and were sitting quietly. Infact, Shishupal having a charming personality had been killed, who had his capital in Chandewati. There was none other in the world comparable to this Krishna, so the whole world recognized him as the True Lord. (2344)

Someone remarked that Sri Krishna was a powerful warrior like Shishupal. Even the gods like Indra, the sun and the Yama (god of death) could not kill Shishupal whereas Krishna had destroyed him within a wink of the eye, (within no time). Seeing all this, the poet thought ro himself (in his mind) that Krishna was the Lord of the whole Universe (creator of fourteen worlds) (regions), and was recognized by all as such. (2345)

The saints and sadhus had realized that Krishna was the creator of the whole Universe (fourteen worlds), and all the gods and demons were his creation only. Even Vedas had described the praises of Krishna only and he was recognised by them as such (creator). The warriors had accepted him as the greatest warrior, and the kings felt jealous of his being the geatest king (Raja). All the warriors present there, realized Sri Krishna as the true form of death (god of death). (2346)

Sri Krishna was standing there with his Sudarshan wheel. He was full of wrathfulness and was greatly agitated with fury, and was not prepared to accept any other enemy to challenge him. He was thundering (like a lion) in that assembly. It appeared as if he was representing the god of death only, by perceiving whom the enemy would feel lifeless, whereas the saints would feel alive only on seeing his form. (2347)

Then Raja Yudishtra said to Sri Krishna -

Swaiyya'

The king Yudishtra then stood up and with folded hands said, "O Lord! Pray forget about your wrath and fury! Shishupal was a great devil, whom you had killed in a moment with your wheel. The Raja wa clasping both his feet, while uttering these words, and tears were flowing from his eyes. O Krishna! If you were to feel so furious with rage, then we have nothing to say" (we have no control). (2348)

The poet Siam has stated that the slave, Raja Yudishtra was requesting him with folded hands saying, "O Krishna! Listen to us. Your wrathfulness and enraged appearance is worth (like) our death, while your benevolvent look even for a moment, was worth giving us a span of life (gift of life). Now please he seated in the assembly with full peace and tranquillity, and be satisfied with the performance of the Yagna. O Lord! I would beseech you as my Lord only, and request you to give up your wrathfulness and pardon us." (2349)

With great beseeching and requests, Raja Yudishtra managed to calm down Sri Krishna and take his seat, whose eyes were shining like the lotus flower and whose appearance was like the god of love (Kamdev). (2350)

Now the episode of Raja Yudishtra's performing Rajsu Yagna begins

Swaiyya'

Arjuna was given the duty of looking after and serving the brahmins as he would do it sincerely; while the service of Rishis was given to Madri's sons (Nukal and Sehdev), which they did with great pleasure. Bhim was made in charge of the kitchen, while Daryodhana was given other household chores. Ved Vyas was performing the recitation of Vedas, while the son of the Sun, Karan, was on the job of giving alms (gifts) to the poor, and all the fourteen worlds (the whole Universe) were afraid of him. (2351)

The sun, moon, Ganesh, and Shiva are always meditating on him. The poet Siam has stated that ascetics like Narad, Sukdev, and brahmins like Vyas are always worshipping him, who had killed warrior like Shishupal and the whole Universe was afraid of him, he was now washing the feet of the brahmins. Who else could there be like him except Sri Krishna (about whom we are talking). (2352)

The poet Siam has stated that the money collected from the enemies after winning battles against them, was being distributed among the brahmins. Some of them were given great honour, while some others were given new robes, (clothes) and other articles. Raja Yudishtra had completed the Yagna with great care from all aspects (as per Vedic rites) at that time. (2353)

Many offerings were given while going to the river for bath and had pleased the elders (gone by) by giving away many gifts (offering water to the sun). By offering money in plenty to the needy people, they were satiated so that their sons or grandsons were not required to beg any more, including any other member of the family as all were offered alms. After performing the Yagna with complete serenity then all of them came back to their camps with great satisfaction. (2354)

Sri Krishna, alongwith all spouses (wives) stayed there for many days. His body was shining like gold, and even the god of love (Kamdev) felt small (felt abashed) before him. Then Daropadi, who had worn oranments on all her limbs, with bowed head, came there. She was asking all the women, how Krishna had married them and wanted to hear from them the whole episode in detail. (2356)

After seeing the Yagna of Yudishtra with wrath. Everyone was saying there that the sons of Pandu Raja had performed the Yagna and as such the whole world was saying their praises but (Kauravas), were feeling jealous that they were not getting any praise. The poet Siam has stated that neither Bhisham nor the sun's (son) Karan could have perfromed such a Yagna, nor we could have done so. (2358)

Swaiyya'

There was a demon, called Maya, who made a beautiful assembly hall, and Indrapur was looking small (nothing) as compared to this, that such a charming building had come up on the Earth. Sri Krishna and Yudishtra alongwith his four brothers were seated there and looking glamorous there. The poet Siam has stated that the beauty of this assembly hall was beyond any description. (2359)

Somewhere from the ceiling looking like a sheet water was dripping and somewhere fountains were functioning, somewhere wrestlers were having bouts, while somewhere drunken elephants were fighting, while elsewhere prostitutes were dancing, and at places hawks were shown fighting, and at places, embellishments of all types were shown and at some places mighty warriors were shown with great splendour. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna was looking glamorous there just as the moon shines among the stars. (2360)

At some places, diamonds were shining beautifully, and at some places palaces studded with jewels were looking gorgeous, The beauty of this place was having no comparison so the godly abodes and the make-townships were feeling belittled before it. Even Brahma was feeling enchanted with its beauty and Shiva was also feeling jealous of it. Where there was ground, it was appearing as water, and where there was water, one could not make it out. (2361)

Yudishtra told Daryodhana -

Swaiyya'

Having created such an assembly hall, Yudishtra invited the son of Dhritrashtra (Daryodhana). So he came along with the son of the sun (Karan) and Bhisham full of pride and egoism. So where there was ground, he mistook it for water, and where there was water, he took it for ground. The poet Siam has stated that he fell down in water without fail, as he could not distinguish between water and gound. (2362)

When Daryodhana fell down in the tank (Sarovar) of water, and he alongwith his clothes, was drowned in water; as he came out of water, he was furious with rage. Sri Krishna to shake off some previous load of similar happening, then made a sign with his eyes to Bhim. So Bhim started saying, "O Man! The son of a blind father is also born blind." (2363)

When Bhim uttered these words in joke, then the Raja Daryodhana was greatly agitated with anger in his mind. This Pandu's son had made fun of me, so I am going to kill him right now. He thought of this thing in his mind. Bhisham and Daronacharya both were also annoyed and enraged, but Sri Krishna then said that Bhim had gone mad. With great fury and wrath, Daryodhana returned to his place and never came back to this assembly hall. (2364)

Swaiyya'

When Daryodhana went back home in furious rage, there was a demon who became enraged. He thought to himself that Sri Krishna had killed his friend, Shishupal, without any hesitation or fear. So he thought in mind that he should approach Shiva for a blessing, and then kill him (Krishna). The poet Siam has stated that after this thought, the demon rushed towards Kedar mountain. (2365)

On hearing Badri Kedar he did lot of service (in Badrika Ashram) and placated Maha Rudra with his service. When he attained the blessing of Shiva to kill Krishna, then he started back in his chariot. On reaching Dwarka he waged a war with Krishna's son; The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna, on hearing about it and bidding farewell to Yudishtra he left for that place. (2366)

When Krishna reached Dwarka, he saw that enemy. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna then told him to fight against him. On hearing Krishna's words, he stretched his bow to the ears, and shot an arrow at him. It appeared as if someone had added ghee to a buning fire for making it more violent. (2367)

When the enemy shot the arrow, then Sri Krishna raced his chariot towards him; then from one side he also reached there and both got engaged in his chariot by striking his chariot against his chariot. The poet has described the beauty of the scene, just as a hawk with one swoop only, kills the partridge. (2368)

The poet Siam has stated that after crashing his chariot, and wielding his sword, he removed his head with one stroke. The force accompanying him was also killed (and sent to Yama's land). Then Sri Krishna was standing in the battle field, filled with ruthlessness (wrathfulness). The beauty of this scene has been depicted by the poet Siam by saying that Sri Krishna had earned a great praise in the whole universe (fourteen worlds). (2369)

Couplet

In the meantime (the enemy) the demon Bakatar reached the spot, where Sri Krishna was standing. (2370)

Swaiyya'

Sri Krishna was then challenged by him in the battle field and he said, "I will not be killed the way you had killed Shishupal. When Sri Krishna heard these words, Then he took up his bow. The poet Siam has stated that after making the enemy unconsious in his chariot, he (Krishna) threw him down on the ground. (2371)

After gaining consciousness he (hid) disappeared from there, and filled with indignation, he again appeared in the battle field. Then with his deceitful learning, he showed Sri Krishna, the head of his father Basudev cut off (as a mirage), then Sri Krishna became furious with rage and tears rolled down from his eyes, and with his Sudarshan Wheel he cut off his head and threw it on the ground. (2372)

The poet Siam has stated that the benevolent Lord must appear before the person at some stage upon whom he meditates in his mind whom Brahma and Shiva even worship and pay their obeisance. The Lord, who had no physical entity, no form colour or symbol and all the four Vedas had described this secret and according to the poet Siam, the same Lord Almightly was, now in the form of Krishna, fighting in the battle field and had killedthe demon. When Krishna, with great ruthlessness, had killed both the enemies in the battle field, then the third enemy, who was still alive, appeared before him. (2374)

He was very furuious, cutting his lips under his teeth and showing great indignation from his eyes, then Balram told him these words, which are being described by the poet Siam (as follows). (2375)

Swaiyya'

"O fool! Why are you fighting against Sri Krishna, who had destroyed the enemies like Madh and Ketab. Even people like Ravana, Harnakush, and Harnachh in the world could not realize his secrets or Kansa and Jarasandh were accompanied with great many kings from various lands." The poet Siam has stated, "O fool! How could you dare to confront Sri Krishna, as he had sent all of them to Yama's land (killed them) in a moment." (2376)

The poet Siam has stated that then Sri Krishna told him, "I had killed both Bakasur and Aghasur and had destroyed fully the multi-coloured army of Jarasandh." Sri Krishna then said, "Whom do you consider as worth anything before my power (or equal in power)?" (2377)

In reply, he said, "You are trying to frieghten me by saying these words, that you had killed the warriors of Kansa like Baki and Bak and then you are telling me that you had killed the forces of Jarasandh in a moment. O Krishna! You are telling me that there was none equal to your power. O Krishna! Are you Kashatriya or an ordinaty worker (labourer) as it does not behove a warrior to praise himself? (2378)

"I shall burn all you power with the fire of my anger (wrath) like straw. I will boil your blood like water, which is running through your body and limbs. The poet Siam has stated that "when I open the kettle of my warriors in the battle field, then I will boil and cook your flesh (of the body) in the battle in the battle field, (then only you will realize my strength)". (2379)

Thus both were engaged in a fierce battle, being enraged fully due to this dispute. Even the sun was covered with the string of arrows being shot by them and the dust rising from the wheels of the chariots was spread all over the sky. The sun and the moon had come to witness this miracle, and they sang songs of joy and happiness. Finally he could not gain a victory over Krishna and then proceeded to Yama's land (was killed). The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna fought a great battle and finally killed the enemy. The body of Baidurath, being disfigured was thrown on the ground in the battlefield. When Sri Krishna saw the blood stained body of the enemy, he was filled with kindness and mercy. Then keeping aside his bow, he shouted aloud, "That I will not fight any more battles." (2381)

Here the episode of the killing of demon Bhaydurath from the chapter of Krishnavatar in Bachittar Natak as part of Dasam Sakand Puran is completed.

Chopaiee

Balram started on his pilgrimage to holy places and came to the holy place of Naimkhiaran. There he had his bath and forgot all his worries. (2382)

Tomar

The Rishi Homharsh was not present there and on hearing about Balram's visit, he rushed back. The poet Siam has stated that Balram was drinking wine at the place. That fool came and stood there and did not pay his obiesance to Balram (by bowing his head). Balram got enraged and taking his bow in hand, he killed him immediately. (2383)

Then again Balram said, "Why was he sitting down and (never showed me any respect)? Why was he not afraid of me? Then out of sheer rage, I killed him with my bow. (2385)

Swaiyya'

I, being a son of Kashatriya, got enraged and killed him. All the Rishis had stood up (to welcome) but he continued sitting like a fool. I am telling you the truth, you may check it. One should behave with Kashatriyas which should help one to live longer in the world. So I killed him thus. Now please pardon me for this (rudeness). (2386)

Swaiyya

"All the four Vedas are likely to be known to him and he could recite them by rote." With these words the son was blessed, so he started reciting the Puranas, as if his father had again become alive (through him). So he enamoured all the Rishis, which had no other parallel in such pleasant state. After bowing to the Rishis, and feeling greatly relieved (pleased) according to the poet Siam, Balram started for the visits to holy places. (2388)

First of all Balram took bath at the place, where Ganga mingles with the ocean, Then he went to Allahabad (where three rivers meet) and then after giving away offerings (alms) Balram went to Hardwar. After having bathed there, Balram went to Badri-Kedar, and felt greatly elated in mind. After visiting all holy places, which need not be detailed, he came to this place. (2389)

Chopaiee

After that he came to New Khavaran and then paid his obeisance to the Rishis. He said to them, "As you had advised me, I have visited all the holy places, as per rules (and now had come back)." (2390)

Then one Rishi explained about his abode, where the enemy was living. When Balram saw that enemy, he challenged him to fight against him (Balram). (2394)

The enemy got furious on hearing these words, and with a thread (gana) tied to his arm, he attacked Balram. Then he fought against Balram, who was the greatest warrior then (had no other comparison). (2395)

Both fought a battle royal there, but none of the two warriors got defeated. When they would get tired, they would rest a while and then again would engage themselves in the fighting. (2396)

Then both fought valiantly, and strike each other with their maces. They would stand firmly in position, without retracing back their steps. It appeared as if two mountains were fighting with great ruthlessness. (2397)

Both the warriors were roaring like the clouds (thuder) which on hearing, even the god of death, felt ashamed. Both the warriors were furious with rage and were fighting fiercely. (2398)

The gods had come down to witness this bout, and the gods had used various modes of conveyance. On the other side, the fairies like Rambha were dancing while on the Earth, the warriors were fighting each other. (2399)

Many strikes of the maces were borne on the body, but they did not bother about them and were shouting, "Kill him, kill him". They would not retract a pace back and both were fighting with great excitement. (2400)

Swaiyya'

When the battle was raging for long there, then Balram took up his moosal. The poet Siam has stated that with both the hands he struck the enemy with it, and the enemy died with this strike, and went away to Yama's land. Thus Balram killed the enemy and gave the brahmin's a peaceful time. (2401)

The story of Balram's valour was related to Raja Prikshit by Sukdev. All those persons, who heard this episode from the brahmins with their own ears, were greatly pleased and comforted. Then he thought of hearing the story of the Lord who had created the moon, the sun and days and nights. So he said, "O venerable brahmins! Please tell me the story of the Lord, whose secret even the Vedas had not realised. (2402)

The Lord, whom (Kartike) with six months, or the Sheshnag, with thousand fangs, were still trying to search out, but have not been able to know his vastness. the poet Siam has stated that the Lord whose praises have been sung by Brahma in the Vedas; whose limits or Greatness even Shiva has been trying to find out and finally they all got tired with their efforts, and said, that they could not realise his secrets. O Sukhdev! I have thought in my mind that I should hear about that Lord from you personally. (2403)

When Raja Prikshit told Sukhdev like this, then Sukhdev gave the details like this. "I would relate to you the story of the benevolent Lord, but keep this secret to yourself only (hidden). There was a brahmin called Sudama, his take (life) of suffering I would relate, and the way Sri Krishna helped him to mitigate his sufferings. O Raja! I am going to relate that episode, which you should hear with full attention. (2404)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar dealing with the episode of killing demon Balal by Balbhadr after visiting and bathing at holy places from the Sri Dasam Puran in Bachittar Natak is completed.

Now the episode of Sudama begins.

Swaiyya'

One Brahmin with his wife was there, who had undergone great hardships in life. One day, getting too much depressed he said, "O Krishna! You are my friend and the whole world knows you as the True Lord." Then the wife said, "You should go there." So he listened to his wife, and accepted her advice, and he got his head shaved off. The wife, then gave him (the penniless brahmin). Some rice to offer to Krishna, and he left for Dwarka. (2405)

The Brahmin said-

Swaiyya'

"I alongwith Krishna used to study under the guidance of our Guru, Sandipan and we were great friends. Now I have enshrined Sri Krishna in my heart, so on the other side, Sri Krishna would also be remembering me. He will give me lot of wealth, which I shall bring back home. Will he not give some help to the needy and helpless people? (The Lord) Krishna would surely recognize me, and then what sort of benedictions he will bestow on me? (2406)

When after travelling a long distance, the brahmin came to Krishna's place, then Sri Krishna saw him and thought to himself that he was Sudama brahmin. Krishna got up from his throne, and getting excited with affection, he went ahead to receive him. The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna made his obeisance to him (by bowing his head) and then hugged him in his clasp. (2407)

Accompanied by him, he came home and gave him lot of honour and respect. Then he sent for some water and washed both his feet and took the washings of his feet as charnamirat. Instead of his hut, Sri Krishna got a golden house built for him. The poet Siam has stated that Krishna could not tell the brahmin and then bade him farewell, without openly giving him any offerings. Swaiyya'

Whosoever would serve Sri Krishna, gets rewarded with lot of wealth, but how could people know his secret, as he alone knows his Greatness? He is the bestower of blessings to his saints, and destroyer of their afflictions, and also the destroyer of greatest enemies. To sustain the poor and helpless people in the world, there was no other equal to him as the benevolent Lord of these people. (2410)

He had killed Shishupal in a moment, who was a great proud and egoistic man. He had killed the demon Baktar, who was never afraid of death even a bit. Being furious with rage, he had defeated Bhumasur, whom even a warrior-god like Indra could not win over. Now the same Lord had got a golden house made for this brahmin. Apart from Sri Krishna, who else could have done such a benevolent act! (2411)

The Lord, who had killed demons like Madh and Ketab and through his benevolence had bestowed land to Indra, while he destroyed the whole enemy army, which confronted him (in the battle field). The same Lord who had given the kingdom to Vibhushan and after killing Ravana had given away Lanka (had washed his hands off Lanka). The poet Siam has stated that the same Lord had got a golden house built for the poor, helpless brahmin. Tell us if there could be any other more benevolent Lord. (2412)

Bishanpad Dhanasari

The Lord, who had his eyes (beautiful) like the deer, with a lining of collyrium on the beautiful face, just like a beautiful noose (to attract others). All the women and men were always enamoured like the deer in watching his charm with their eyes glued on him. But Sri Krishna always seemed to offer himself as a sacrifice to them. (2413)

The eyes of Sri Krishan always looked like the lotus flower, and his glamour was seen like the shining sun in its glory. His lotus-eyes were thus never closed to the worldly charm, rather the eyes of the whole world were always keenly glued to watch his deer-like eyes. The beauty of this scene has been depicted by the poet as if millions of black bees were enticed by the aroma of lotus (flowers) like charm of Sri Krishna. (2414)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar dealing with the episode of driving away the poverty of poor brahmin Sudama by getting a house of gold built for him from Dasam Sikand Puran in Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now the episode of Kahna's visit to Kurukshetra on Solar-eclipse day begins.

Swaiyya'

When the day of Solar eclipse came near, an astrologer has said that Krishna's mother, father and brother planned to visit Kurukshetra so taking alongwith a huge army of varied native nature. If one tried to find out his Greatness he would be unable to do so (sadly mistaken). (2415)

So from one side Sri Krishna had arrived in Kurukshetra while from the other side Nand alongwith all others came there. So Chanderbhaga and Radha (daughter of Brishbham) had a glimpse of Sri Krishna. All the women were enchanted with the charm (appearance) of Sri Krishna and they bowed to him with surprise, but they could not utter a single word. Nand and Jasodha, out of great love, hugged him. Then with increased affection the eyes of Nand and Jasodha were filled with tears and then said, "You had left Brij town and had gone to Mathura and you preferred to stay there as you had killed Chandur alongwith Kansa and destroyed them. O heartless Krishna! After seeing our predicament were you not filled with our love (and a desire to meet us). (2417)

Jasodha told Kahna -

Swaiyya'

With increased affection, Jasodha told Krishna, "O Son! When we brought you up to become a grown-up man, then you must have realised how much love and affection you had for us in your heart. O Sri Krishna! Why should I blame you for all this infact it was all my fault, as I had once beaten you by tying you with a rope. I know, you have got a grudge against me since then." (2418)

Then Sri Krishna replied, "O Mother! I am telling you one thing, which you must accept as pure truth." Jasodha said, "By taking training (teachings) of others, you should do such actions, which we could also hear. In your separation we feel it as our death, while with a glance of yours it gives us hope of life. O Child! I take on me all your hurdles (on my shoulders). O Brij-lover! By meeting Krishna, both Nand and Jasodha got great relief and satisfaction (pleasure) at heart. Then Sri Krishna went to the place, where all the milkmaids were collected. (2420)

Swaiyya'

When the milkmaids learnt that Sri Krishna had come to their place, then somone had come to their place, then someone got up to welcome him, while some others felt greatly pleased (their love knew no bounds). The poet has stated that the milkmaids, who were wearing dirty clothes, changed into new robes. It appeared as if a dead person had come back to life again and a ray of life was emitted in their hearts. (2421)

The milkmaids said-

When the milkmaids saw Sri Krishna, then one of them remarked, "O Lord! Since the day, you had gone on a chariot alongwith Akroor, with great hopes, the life of Brij town had flickered and became completely lifeless; and you had never asked about the welfare of the milkmaids, through your kindness. One had said these words, while another stood quietly watching his face. (2422)

"O friend! Since the time Sri Krishna had gone to Mathura, there has been no love left in my heart, but he has not shown any love or affection in his heart, so we had considered him in our mind as without any affection (loveless). The poet Siam has depicted this beautiful incident as if Krishna had deserted the milkmaids just as a snake leaves the slough (cast skin of a snake) behind and moves away." (2423)

Chanderbhaga and Radha said these words to Krishna (so that he could hear) "Sri Krishna had left us and gone to Mathura, forgetting all the love of Brij town. Just as Radha had shown her pride, similarly now Krishna had shown his egostic tendency. This is what comes to mind now. From that day, we got separated and remained separated till now and now only we have seen your face (after that day). (2424)

There was another milkmaid very dear to Krishna, who said on meeting him. "Chanderbhaga and Radha, who were wearing sunflower coloured (red-coloured) saris, have forgotten about the story of their sensuous love for him, but are now enamoured only by watching Sri Krishna and are looking like dolls in a painting." The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna gave a sermon of knowledge to all the milkmaids then. (2425)

The damsels of Brij town had learnt about Sri Krishna's arrival in Kurukshetra. the Vedas had described him as omni-present and the women folk had forgotten all their sufferings by having his glimpse only. They have pinned their body and soul at the lotus-feet of Krishna and they have sacrificed all the wealth over him. Then Sri Krishna took them aside and said, "Now try to learn something of knowledge as well." The separation or meeting one another was the way of this world, and body love was all falsehood" (not truth). (2426)

Swaiyya'

After giving this sermon to all the milkmaids, Sri Krishna stood up. then on meeting Nand, Jasodha and Pandu's sons (five Pandavas) Krishna showed lot of keenness and love (affection). All the Kauravas, who had come there, went back to their homes (pleased). The poet Siam has stated that after that Sri Krishna came back to Dwarka. (2427)

The poet Siam has stated that Basudev went back after the performance of the Yagna, whose son (Krishna) was the god of all the gods of the universe (fourteen worlds), the Lord himself. (2428)

He then praised Krishna in many ways, and kept Krishna's thought (picture) in his mind, and worshipped him as the Lord. Sri Krishna also realized the whole situation (of revelation). (2430)

Here the Chapter of Krishnavtar from Dasam Sakand Puran dealing with the episode of Krishna's taking part in the Yagna at Kurukshetra and giving sermon to the milkmaids and then proceeding to Dwarka in| the Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now the episode of bringing back the six sons of Devki from "Bal lok" begins.

Swaiyya

In the meantime Devki came to meet Sri Krishna and said, "I have believed fully in my heart, that you are the creator of this Universe, (fourteen worlds); you alone are the killer of demons Madh and Ketab." The poet Siam has stated that Devki hugged them all, considering them as her children. Due to Krishna's benevolence, they could remember their previous life (birth), and they said, we are now brahmins. In the very presence of their mother and father, they went away to heavens (Brahma's land). (2432)

Now the episode of Subhadra's marriage begins.

If you go to wage war against Arjuna, then it would be like inviting your death only. Why do you not go to war against him? I have stopped fighting now, and this is my final decision. (2437)

After taking all that dowry Arjuna went to his place (home). (2440)

The Raja of Mithla would visit the brahmin's house and talk about meeting Sri Krishna and to have a glance of him. The poet Siam has stated that both of them would not talk of anything else all the time (morning and evening). The brahmin would say that Sri Krishna would surely come to meet them and the Raja was also saying that Shiam (Krishna) would meet them (visit them). With the talk of Sri Krishna only, they would spend all their time, including their breath, hours and nights. (2443)

Sri Krishna then thought of the love of the brahmin and the Raja in his mind, that both of them were always meditating on him alone, and they had forgotten all about their household chores. So calling his charioteer, and riding his chariot, Sri Krishna left for their place. He also had decided in his mind to visit these saints and satisfy them with his meeting them. (2444)

Sri Krishna, out of their love, told one thing to the Raja and brahmin that they should meditate on him as the four Vedas had directed, and told them to remember this (by listening with attention). (2447)

Here the chapter of Krishnavtar dealing with the meeting with Raja and the brahmin (giving his pesonal touch) by Sri Krishna from Dasam Sakand Puran Bachittar Natak Granth is completed. Now the episode of the meeting of Sukdev and Raja Preekshit and their talk among themselves begins.

Swaiyya'

"O Sukdev! I have thought to myself that I should ask you about the way the Vedas sing the prasies of the Lord and to know from you the answer to my querry." The poet Siam has stated that they decided to worship the Lord and sing his praises by giving up all worldly attachments (love of home). Please listen carefully that the Vedas have prescribed this method of singing his praises; that there was no form, colour, sign or symbol of the Lord. "So such words were spoken by Sukdev to the Raja. The Raja (on hearing these words) accepted them as the truth about the Lord. (2448)

His praises were being sung all the time throughout the Universe (in fourteen worlds) (day and night). He is remebered with knowledge, with meditation, by having bath and with true love all the time. The Vedas also meditate on him alone, and we should always worship the Lord only. "O Raja! Listen to these words. (2449)

"The person, whose body was always immersed in Krishna's love, was always singing Lord' priaess. He had talked to my father and I have heard from him. All were meditating on Lord's Name, except the person who was lacking wisdom. In fact, we should always meditate on the Lord; and Sukdev gave this advice to the Raja (2450)

The Lord, who cannot he attained by undergoing suffering, neither he could be gained by having matted hair on the head; who cannot be attained by gaining knowledge through studies, nor by performing penance; neither by keeping eyes closed nor by singing his praises. Neither by playing on clarionet, or by dancing or by giving noble teachings, one may please the saints, but without developing true love for the Lord, he cannot be attained, as it was not possible to know his secrets. He cut his body into pieces and then sacrified it into the fire pit, without having any fear. He got the blessing that "If he placed his hand on someone's head, he would become (reduced to) ash and fly off." (2457)

On who-so-ever's head, if I were to place my hand, he should be reduced to ashes and fly away. Even he received this invoaction (spiritual power), then that fool wanted to kill Rudra himself fist of all, so as to kidnap his wife. Rudra tried to run away. Then suddenly Krishna appeared there, and with a (clever) deceitful move got him burnt. O Rajan! Here is the end of description of the killing of Bhasmaged demon from Krishnavatar of Sri Bachittar Natak Granth is completed.

Now the episode of Bhriglata begins

Swaiyya'

There were seven Rishis seated at one place and were discussing whether Rudra was better, or Brahma or Vishnu, whom we should worship and placate first. All the three were limitless, and no one knows their limits (Greatness) and no one had attained them. There was one Rishi, named Bhrigu among them, and he promissed (vowed) to gain their secrets. So he started off for perceiving them (meeting them). (2459)

First he went to Rudra's place and told him, "You always are killing the beings" (being annoyed with him) Rudra took up his trident and rushed to kill him. Then Bhrigu went to Brahma's place and said, "He reads (charts) Vedas, but does not know their secrets." After Brahma got annoyed, then he went to Vishnu's place, who was taking rest in peace, so the Rishi being enraged, struck him with his leg. But Vishnu did not get angry, rather he took the Rishis' feet in his hands and sought his pardon for any disrespect. So he accepted Vishnu only as Krishna himself. (2460)

Then Vishnu told Bhrigu -

Swaiyya'

Then Vishnu took the leg strike in his normal course, and laughed, then said to the brahmin, "My chest is as hard as stone, so your foot might have got hurt on striking me. I would seek a gift (blessing) from you. If you agree, then please pardon my guilt (fault). Whatever forms I shall assume in the world. your foot mark will remain on the body everytime. (2461)

When Sri Krishna said these words, then the Rishi felt great relief and peace of mind. After paying his homage to the Lord many times, the brahmin returned to his Ashram (place). Then he related the whole story of meeting shiva, Brahma and Vishnu and their reactions to the other Rishis. From that time onwards all the Rishis started,worshipping and meditating on Sri Krishna and started saying, that we have realised the True Lord in the form of Sri Krishna. (2462)

When Bhrigu brahmin related this episode to the other Rishis, then all started worshipping Sri Krishna." O Brother! Vishnu was the limitless Lord, who is called benevolent Lord, whose secrets even Vedas have not been able to explain (realise). Rudra was very furious, and wears a rosary of skulls around the neck, thus he is trying to show off, which is false (not his true self). So do not worship him, rather worship Sri Krishna, as he truly represents the Lord Himself. (2463)

When Bhrigu explained to others about this episode, then all of them started worshiping Vishnu. Just as in the world, people believe in ghosts and demi-godss, similarly they (the world) have created this Rudra. Then who was Brahma? Why should anyone worship him by taking a rosary in hand, as through him we cannot realize the True Lord (Prime-Soul). So it would be proper to meditate on Sri Krishna. Whosoever has worshipped him, would forget about all others. (2464)

On hearing the wailings of the brahmin, Arjun showed his great power and strength (to deal with such things) and said, "Now I will protect your son. But being born dead, Arjun could not help him for his protection, and being ashamed of himself he thought of immolating himself. Then Sri Krishna happened to come that side and advised Arjuna to leave his obstinacy, and taking him on his chariot, he left for the place where those children were abiding. (2466)

Sri Krishna then reached a place, where there was complete darkness and one could not see anything. There were twelve suns shining there, but the net result of all these suns was total darkness. Arjun was also on the same chariot and was frightened. Sri Krishna then made him understand like this. "O Arjuna! Do not worry. When my Sudarshan wheel appears on the scene, then Sri Krishna finds his way." (2467)

Then Sri Krishna returned to Dwarka, and after giving back the brahmin's children, he felt greatly relieved and pleased. He thus saved his saint (Arjuna) from getting burnt in the fire (immolated). So all saints sang the praises of Sri Krishna. (2471)

The poet Siam has stated that Sri Krishna with great keen pleasure in the water, got clasped with the women folk, and the women developed great love for him. The women, who were clubbed to Sri Krishna's body developed the lust of sersuous love within their hearts. They were completely enamoured with his love and seeing his beauty, they were completely involved (engrossed) in his love. Krishna was close by, but Sri Krishna was not within their reach, though they were engrossed in his love, and could see him (they could not catch hold). (2473)

The poet Siam has stated that the women folk, interested in Krishna's beauty, were moving around in all the ten directions. They had made saffron marks on the forehead, alongwith (chandan) sandalwood lining on them. All the women were engrossed in the lust of love and then were rushing towards their homes. They were uttering these words, O Sri Krishna! Where have you gone, deserting us alone? (2474)

Some of these women were trying to locate Krishna, as they had great doubts in their mind, and their bodies were covered with beautiful clothes, whose beauty is beyond description. They were not feeling any hesitation and were shouting "Krishna, Krishna and were not feeling any hesitation and were shouting "Krishna, Krishna", only. It appeared as if they had lost all their (shame) modesty and were repeating, "O Krishna! Where have you deserted us; now give us your glance at least" (let us have your glance). (2475)

Then Sri Krishna came out of water and wore beautiful robes on the body. What praises could the poet shower? Infact, the god of love, even gets enamoured with its love. (2478)

The women also wore beautifu; dresses. and gave many gifts (alms) to the brahmins. All those persons, who sang the praises of Sri Krishna there, were given wealth and their poverty alleviated. (2479)

Sri Krishna had destroyed the army of Jarasandh and had completely annihilated the egoism (pride) of the enemy. In the same manner, Sri Krishna would like to destroy the sins of his saints completely. (2481)

The poet Siam has stated that "the saint (bhakta) who sings the praises of Sri Krishna with devotion, or the poet who writes the praises (greatness) of Sri Krishna in poetry form, or the person, who listens to the episodes of Sri Krishna from others and meditates on him, the poet Siam has stated that such a person then does not take birth in this world in human form (attains Salvation). The person, who sings the praises of Sri Krishna or writes his praises in poetry form, according to the poet Siam, that person then does not burn in the fire of sins. Whosoever develops love of Sri Krishna and gets immersed in his meditation with concentration of mind for a little while even, would get rid of all his sins and his worries would be cast away. The person, who would worship the lotus feet of Krishna, would not again go through the tranmigration of soul (would not be born again). (2483)

The poet Siam has stated that the person who would recite the sermons of Krishna, and meditate on Sri Krishna with devotion or gives alms to the poor in the name and love of Sri Krishna, or the persons forgetting about household chores, meditates in heart would get rid of all their sins in this life itself, and proceed to heavens themselves (Brahmin lok). (2484)

(On the other hand), if a person does not develop love of Sri Krishna, but performs penance, and undergoes hardships and body suffering, or goes to Kanshi and studies all the Vedas with great concentration, would not attain the real essence of life. Was Krishna in the control of such peresons, who gave many offerings (in alms)? No, infact they have lost their wealth without purpose. But whosoever has developed love for Sri Krishna with devotion, in their hearts, have attained unison with the Lord. (Sri Krishna). (2485)

What is the use, if someone closes his eyes and sits like a crane, and shows off in the guise (garb) of a saint, or goes on bathing (at holy places) like a fish, but it would be futile. Will he attain the Lord? The poet Siam has stated that the frog, who goes on making noise day and night or a person flies off like a bird (to all places), (according to the poet) the saints have confirmed that without developing love for Krishna, no one could placate him or please him. (2486)

If someone has sung the praises of the Lord for the greed of collecting wealth, or someone has danced for the purpose of worship, but without getting absorbed in it, then he would not find the wonderous path of the Lord's attainment. Infact, he has made a fun of himself in the world, as he had not sought the essence of worship even in his dreams. The poet Siam has stated without true love with devotion and dedication, no one has attained unison with Sri Krishna. (2487)

If some people have left their homes and gone to the forest, and have meditated there for long, or like a sidha have gone into a trance, or like a muni have listened to holy episodes, they have tried to seek the Lord, but have failed in their efforts. The poet Siam has stated that all the Vedas, Katebs, and saints with their teachings have stressed on this thing only. The poets have stated, "O Saints! Listen carefully! Whosoever has developed love of the Lord, have attained him. (2488)

In this world, the life of a person is worth while and praise-worthy if he recites Lord's True Name and desires for fighting a battle for a virtuous cause, as this human body is perishable and is not everlasting. If someone boards a boat of praise (due to fighting for a righteous cause), he will cross this worldly ocean (of falsehood) with success. Let us make this body an abode of patience, and burn the lamp of knowledge in (hand) the mind, throwing out the falsehood of weak mindedness (cowardliness) from this body. (2492)

The Essence of Sri Guru Granth Sahib

This work involved me completely in the translation of Sri Guru Granth Sahib in English Prose and took me, to complete it, 10 years from 1990 to 2000. In fact this is the best part of my life, as the whole day was spent in studying and understanding each hymn and then writing its meaning first in Punjabi and then translating that Punjabi version into English Prose. The hymns of each page took two days to complete the job in English version, giving not the literal meanings, but the essence of each hymn, as understood by me. Of course, even a life time is not enough to deal with this subject, as Gurbani is too deep in its philosophy for any individual to really understandand then express it in a foreign language.

In fact, the Guru has clarified it by giving the final verdict by saying:

as such human being has his limitations, but the effort is always rewarded.

II. a) Philosophy of Sikh Gurus

i) This deals with the banis of Nitname, namely Jap Ji, Jaap Sahib, Sukhmani Sahib and Swaiyyais etc.

ii) This book is in two parts, the first part dealing with the meaning of the Gurbani and the second one giving its philosophy under ten headings.

b) The Four Pillars of Sikhism

There are four main pillars of Sikhism, namely Guru, Lord's will (Hukam) Sadh Sangat and Naam.

True Name is to be attained through the help and benevolence of the Guru. The Guru helps us to understand the meaning and purpose of human life, and then understanding Gurbani with its simple version and guidance through four main-supports.

c) The Eternal Bliss - It deals with the philoshphy of Anand Sahib by Guru Amar Das Ji. It helps us to understand the purpose and meaning of human life and understanding Sikh Philosophy with simple version of Gurbani and its guidance.

d) The Universal Message of Guru Granth Sahib. It deals with a simple explanation of the the philosophy of Sikhism and explained briefly with its meaning and objectives . All the hymns are listed. It is meant for those, who feel they have no time to read the full version or scope of the philosophy of Guru Granth Sahib. So in simple language, in few words it deals with the central idea of each hymn. in four volumes.

e) Zafarnama - Letter of Victory written by Guru Gobind Singh Ji to Aurangzeh at the end of hostilities. It poems a part of the present work (5 volumes).

f) Amrit Boond Suhavani (ਅੰਮ੍ਰਿਤ ਬੂੰਦ ਸੁਹਾਵਣੀ)

All the hymns of Guru Granth Sahib, with Rehaou (ਰਹਾਉ) are listed and explained fully in Punjabi language.

g) I am proud to be a Sikh - briefly explains the beauty of Sikh tenets and Sikh philosophy

1. The job of translating Dasam Granth Sahib in English prose, with the original in Gurmukhi (Punjabi) alongwith the roman script for non-punjabi readers is not appreciated in some circles for certain reasons. But this job was entrusted to me by Baba Virsa Singh Ji of Gobind Sadan in 2002, and completed by me in 2005. Some bow the work remained unpublished due to the sudden death of Baba Virsa Singh Ji. So I am totally indebted to Gobind Sadan for the work.

2. Since the work was lying incomplete for almost ten years, I thought of publishing this work based on an English version of the Punjabi version by Dr. Rattan Singh Jaggi & Mrs. Gursharan Kaur Jaggi with their blessings. Of course the Roman Script of the original was not in the original concept, which has been added now for obvious reasons.

3. Some people have reservations about the portions of the Granth dealing with "Pakhiyan Charitar", but Baba Vira Singh Ji always believed that this portion is completely dealt with by Guru Gobind Singh Ji and I am equally convinced with it. Different views have been expressed by different people. So I owe my gratitude to Dr. Rattan Singh Jaggi & Mrs. Gursharan Kaur Jaggi for this publication.

4. I am also indebted to Major Karnail Singh of Sector 34, Chandigarh who has been of great help to me and had always given me moral support in my efforts, as President of Gurdwara Sri Guru Tegh Bahadur, Sector 34, Chandigarh.

Introduction

The original granth, called Vidya Sagar, weighing about nine maunds, including the poetry of Guru Gobind Sing Ji and other learned poets, seems to have been destroyed in the devastating currents of Sarsa Reviulet while the Guru abandoned the fort of Anandpur Sahib in 1704 and headed for Chamkaur Sahib alongwith 40 Sikhs only.

Then the first attempt to collect and combine the various remnants of different poetic versions of the Guru remaining safe with certain Sikh followers was made by Bhai Mani Singh, the first Sikh Granthi of Darbar Sahib, Amritsar in the form of a Pothi about 50 years later. Bhai Deep Singh, Bhai Sukha Singh and some others made similar attempts to publish a version of Dasam Granth. Out of all these versions the most important are Bhai Mani Singh Beer, Topkhana Patiala Wali Beer (Moti Bagh Gurdwara) and Sri Patna Sahib Wali Beer. All these versions differ briefly in their contents due to various reasons. In 1897 Gurmat Pracharak Sabha Amritsar collected about 32 versions of this Granth. The various Banis (Poetic versions) constitute the Dasam Granth as follows :-

i) Jaap, ii) Akal Ustat, iii) Bachittar Natak, iv) Chandi Charitar-I, v) Chandi Charita'r-II, vi) Vaar Sri Bhagouti Ji Ki (Vaar Durga), vii) Gyan Prabodh, viii) Choubis Avtar, ix) other Avtars (Brahma Rudar), x) Shabad Hazarai, xi) Swaiyyas, xii) Khalsa Mehma, xiii) Shastra Naam Mala, xiv) Charitar Pakhiyan and xv) Zafar Nama & (Haqaitain). In his Haqaitain report Giani Sardul Singh had clarified all the doubts about its authenticity. Then in 1902 Bhai Bishan Singh (of Sangrur) confirmed its author as Guru Gobind Singh based on certain facts and reasoning. Then in 1950 Dr. Trilochan Singh also confirmed 'Dasam Granth' as authored by the Guru himself.

Now in 1999 on the inauguration of 300th Birth Anniversary of Khalsa Dr. Rattan Singh Jaggi and Dr. Gursharan Kaur Jaggi, under the patronage of Baba Virsa Singh Ji (Gobind Sadan) have published a Punjabi version of the Granth in five volumes.

The present publication of 'Dasam Granth' including the roman version of the Original Text' is an attempt to present it in English for the benefit of English Readers. This version is based on an English version of the text given by Dr. R.S. Jaggi (with his blessings and goodwill).

No individual is capable of commenting on the greatness and life of Guru Gobind Singh Ji, (Sahib-e-Kamal) and personally I feel, this effort and attempt to publish a part of his literacy poetic writings in the form of Dasam Granth in English prose is to understand his greatness and mission in life. I have no ability or capacity to mention even about his various facets of life, like war-fare, creation of Khalsa, challenging the mighty emperor Aurangzeb and fighting against mughal oppression, sacrifice of the whole family (father, four sons and mother), what to talk of his literary achievements.

I could only give my opinion that the style of poetic versions in Dasam Granth in the form of various Chhands in 'Brij' alongwith Arabic and Persian vocabulary proves the point that the author of this Granth could be none other than Guru Gobind Singh himself.

Though Sri Guru Granth Sahib was annointed (appointed) as the living Guru of the Sikhs by Guru Gobind Singh Ji, after him, Dasam Granth deserves the same respect as a literary achievement of the great Guru.

Preface

The Third Volume of Dasam Granth deals with the topics of Choubis Avtar (twenty four incarnations) eg. Nar Avtar Nehkalanki Avtar etc. Then it further discusses Brahma Avtar, Rudra Avtar including the chatper on Dutt and Parasnath.

Then some hymns, Swaiyyai's and Shastar Naam Mala form a part of this volume.

The Shastar Naam Mala explains the diversity of descriptions detailed by Guru Gobind Singh ji in analysing various types of armour like arrows and guns etc. which is really charming and interesting. The hymns under Rag Ramkali (Patshahi 10) and Rags Sorath, Kalyan and Tilang apart from Rag Bilawal and devgandhari extol the grandeur of the Lord and His True Name further in support of the philosophy of Sikhism as explained in Sri Guru Granth Sahib. Similarly the Swaiyyas (Patshahi 10) add to the glory of the Lord further, thus giving another angle in the praise of the Lord-Sublime. Thus Dasam Granth is complimentary to Sri Guru Granth Sahib.

Foreword

Bhai Gurbachan Singh is a well known scholar who has written an exegesis of the entire Sri Guru Granth Sahib in Scholastic English with great dedication and devotion. He spent ten long years to accomplish this remarkable task. Besides, he has written a book in Punjabi.

'Amrit Boond Suhaavani' Which contains meanings and explanation of all the 'Pause Verses' in the Sikh scripture.

Three years ago, another idea came into his mind that he should prepare an English annotation of the 'banis' of Sri Guru Gobind Singh Ji, which is not available in the market. In this series, the first volume prepared by him is in your hands. It contains the original text in Panjabi and Roman transliteration (on the left) page followed by their translation into English (on the right). It will prove to be very useful to the English knowing readers.

A Gursikh reads or recites five "Nitnem banis' in the morning and two in the evening without fail. These include three 'banis' (compositions) of the Tenth Guru Sahib: 1. Jaap Sahib, 2. Swaiyyas Patshahi Dasvin 3. Kabio Vach Benati Choupaiee(Patshahi Dasvin). In the present time, some misguided and mistaken scholars create misconceptions about these 'banis' (compositions). While administering 'amrit', a sikh is instructed to read/recite these 'banis' (compositions) regularly. The command of the 'Panj Piaras' (Five Beloved ones) is the Guru's command, which we must obey humbly; controversy about them is uncalled for. The entire 'Jaap Sahib' composition is uttersd in praise of the Timeless Lord. In the very first stanza Guru Sahib says:

That Lord is immovable or eternal Being. He has neither any mark nor sign, not form, nor complexion, nor caste, nor clan. He is self illumined and this glory is very intense and powerful. His name is indescribable.

Therefore. I am describing his attributive names.

'who can describe all thy Names? Only men of good sense mention Thy attributive Names.'

In 'Jaap Sahib', we find words exactly parallel and synonomous to those in the 'mool mantra' (fundamental chant) from 'Ek onkar' to 'Gurprasaad' recorded at the beginning of Sri Guru Granth Sahib:

Similarity between Jap JI and Jaap Sahib is given below:-

Jap Ji	Jaap Sahib
Ek onkar	ek hai anek hai
Satnaam	Sadavang saroopai
Karta Purkh	Kariang, Sarbung karta, Samstul, Nivarai
Nir bhou	Nirbhai Abheet
Nir Vair	Namo rag roopai, Na Satrai, Namitrai
Akal moorat	Namastang akalai Nirbhoot, Rooprung
Ajooni	Ajai, Ajanmai
Saibhung	Sarab bisa rachio Garan Bhanjanhar
Gur Prasad	Tav Prasad

It is therefore, clear that the tenth Guru's composition 'Jaap Sahib' conforms to the 'bani' (Guru's utterance) enshrined in Sri Guru Granth Sahib.

The 'Chaupai Patshahee Daswin' contains the following stanza : (Takoe kar pahan unmanat)

Rank fools contemplate the Lord by making His idol holy,
For they cannot fathom this mystery,
Shiva as Eternal Lord they call,
But recognize not his secret at all (16)

Guru Sahib openly rejects idol worshkp and the worshippers of Lord Shiva. People have no knowledge and understanding of the Transcendent Lord God. They worship stone idols. They worship Lord Shiva as if he were transcendent God Himself. Who else but the Tenth Guru could administer such a warning?

In the 'swaiyyas Patshahi Daswin' have been sung the laudations of the timeless one God. We have been cautioned about the so-called dera-heads, holy men and braham-gyanis. The hollowness of the various methods of practicing Divine Name (meditation) have been exposed. We have been for-fidden to do idol worship. Only the method of practicing God's loving devotion has been prescribed for meeting and attaining God.

In the light of the facts stated above, it is absolutely clear that any controversy about these 'bani's (compositions) is uncalled for.

By annotating these compositions in English, Bhai Sahib Gurbachan Singh Ji has made a commenlable effort. English-knowing readers, who do not know Panjabi, will be immensely benefitted. Inspite of indifferent health and old age, with the Guru's grace, he is continuing to serve Gurmat literature even today. I pray to the Satguru to grant him good health and greater spiritual strength so that he may continue to render maximum service to Gurmat literature through his writings.

Now the Episode of Nar Incarnation (Nar Avtar)

Choupaiee

Now I would describe the 22nd incarnation (avtar) the way the (Kal Purkh) Lord (Murari) had transformed Himself in this form. From Nar Incarnation Arjun had taken birth, who had won over most of the bravest of men. (1)

First of all , he vanquished Nivat Kavcha (the Stalwart enemies of Indra God), thus helped to assuage the pain of his father, Indra. Then he fought against Shiva, when Shiva (god of death) had blessed him with certain favours. (2)

Then he saved Daryodan from his bondage (of various calamities) and turned away the king of Gandhrab) by vanquishing him in war. The jungle of Khandwa was then burnt by fire, and made such an arch of his arrows (shadow of) that not a drop of water could reach in help. (3)

If I were to attempt writing more details of this episode, then I am afraid the Granth would become unwieldy (enlarged), so I have tried to explain in brief only. Wherever there is any flaw or shortcoming, the poets may rectify it themselves. (4)

The proud Kaurvas of wide forms (nature) were defeated and all their territories were annexed by him. Thus he pleased Krishna and received from him a letter of victory. (5)

Then ke killed Bhisham (Gureev) and Karan also, by engaging them in a fierce battle, further more he was victorious over the brave warrior Daroyadan and won over the rule over Bharat (India) permanently. (6)

How far could I describe the details of this episode, else it would be too lengthy, I am afraid. Details are too wieldy, and to cut if short, Arjun became the twenty-second Incarnation. (7)

Now description of the 23rd Budh Incarnation

Choupaiee

Now I would describe the episode of Budh Incarnation, just as the Lord (Kal Purkh) transformed Himself into that form. We should try to understand the name of the Budh Incarnation, who had no name, place or village as such. (1)

We cannot ascribe any name or place to this Incarnation, as such it could only be understood as Budh Incarnation. His form could be taken as a (Statue) form of stone. This episode has not been accepted during the age of Kal Yug by anybody. (2)

Dohra

There is no form or physical appearance. In the world, the existence of a Statue (Stone) form is referred to as Budh Incarnation. (3)

Here end the episode of twenty-third Incarnation of Bachittar Natak Granth. All is well. (23)

Now the Description of Nehkalanki 24th Incarnation

Choupaiee

Now I am going to describe the episode by incorporating my intelligent version with full thoughtful consideration, that the twenty fourth Incarnation is that of Kalki, and am describing it with full beautitude. (1)

When the Earth is fully burdened with the sinful actions then the details of sins, besetting it cannot be mentioned. Many forms of Sins are committed and stated therein, when the mother enjoys sexful life with her own son. (2)

The whole people are devoid of Caste system. Nobody is to be seen belonging to a particular Caste. Most women are engrossed in demoralised life, forgetting the life of True Love, based on religion. (4)

Every house is engrossed in a life of falsehood, while the moon of truthful living is missing completely. Everywhere there are uprisings, and the son is enjoying sexual behaviour with his mother. (5)

No-where can find a trace of truthfulness with all the effort, and everyone's mind is engaged in falsehood. With such a background there would be different versions of religion in each home, and no one would ever attempt to read (touch Shastras and) Smritis. (6)

There will be no true Hindu or Muslim as there would be prevalent various religions in all the homes. No one would try to follow the path (of life) shown by others, thus contradicting the task of one another. (7)

ਭਾਰਾਕ੍ਰਿਤ ਧਰਾ ਸਭ ਹੁਇ ਹੈ । ਧਰਮ ਕਰਮ ਪਰ ਚਲੈ ਨ ਕੁਇ ਹੈ ।

The whole world (Earth) would be suffering under the burden of sinful life, as no one would follow the path of righteousness. (8)

Dohra

In each home there would be many forms of religious life, and none would follow one religion. Everywhere sinful life would take charge, and true religion would vanish. (9)

Choupaiee

The whole populace would be devoid of Caste or creed, and the Kashatriyas would be nowhere to be seen. Everyone could follow a form of religion which would propagate lower levels of morality. (10)

Forgetting about the Hindu or Muslim religions, each house would be divided into various religions. No one would follow the advice of one side, as such no one would try to live together with others. (11)

Everyone would try to behave like God, and a younger person would not respect the elder one. Each house will have many forms of religion, and would rest in the home like Lords. (12)

No one would read Puranas even by mistake, neither anyone would read Koran. If anyone were to handle Vedas or Katebs, he would be burnt in the fire of cowdung cakes. (13)

The world would follow a sinful life, as the religion would run away from its citadel. Each house would be beset with different forms of religion, and religious life would disappear being considered a vague (doubtful) form of life. (14)

ਏਕ ਏਕ ਮਤ ਐਸ ਉਚੈ ਹੈ । ਜਾ ਤੇ ਸਕਲ ਸੂਦ੍ ਹੁਇ ਜੈ ਹੈ ।

Each one will consider his religion as Supreme, as such all will have a lower standard of morality. No one would follow Brahmanic Values, and the whole populace would be devoid of Varunas. (15)

The Brahmins wife would be seen in the house of a lower Caste fellow, while the Brahmin would have a low-caste (Shudra) wife. (16)

The whole population would not follow one religion, as such the Vedas or (Koran) Katebs would be completely discarded. Each house will have different form of religious life, and none would follow a particular path. (17)

Gita Malti Chhand

Each house would be following three versions of religion as directed by one individual. Every-one would move around with pride and none would bow before the other. So every month various new versions of religion would appear on the horizon. No one would pay respect to gods, ancestors, or religious heads, even by default. (18)

Forgetting the gods and Pirs (Saints) everyone would consider himself as god. Various people, would get together and make fun of the others religion. For a month or two months or half a month, they would follow one religion, while eventually that (religion) path would vanish in the air by itself like the water bubble. (19)

Vedas and Kateb would be discarded by finding fault within their teachings. In their own interest they would follow some magical versions. (of Jantars etc). They would not allow anyone to utter the words of Vedas or Katebs, and they would not give a penny in alms to anyone. (20)

They will be engrossed in Sinful actions forgetting all about moral and religious feelings. Viewing monetary gains they would not care for killing even their son or friend. Every day there would be new religions coming up. But during the age of Kal Yug apart from reciting True Name (of the Lord) all other practices are fruitless.(21)

Some religion will last for one day or another for two days, as finally all such religions forced on populace disappear the third day. Then some other religion would appear on the scene, which would last upto the fourth day. During the Kal Yug age only a religion of (practical) worth-while value would exist while others are futile. (22)

Everywhere men and women would formulate new poetic versions. Then people would not be afraid of the (Prime-Soul) Primal force (God) being engaged in various types of magical and unnatural forces. Padhistha Chhand

The world will be filled more with Sinners Based on intelligent discussions (thoughts) there would be no talk about religion. All the beings, seen in various lands, including foreign lands, will mostly be involved in sinful actions. (111)

One would not come across an ideal or intelligent person anywhere, who would be talking thought-fully based on intelligent discussions. Men & Women would not belong to one religion, rather they will have various forms of religious practices. There will be no discussion on useful or futile things/actions as such, as it will vanish completely. (112)

Mareh Chhand

People will develop great love for immoral women, who will have a character of base and mean moral values, though they might have been born in good and great families (may have noble heritage) as on growing young they would be more interested in immoral values of life. They would be very beautiful like carved paintings, or flowers of various hues. They would seem to have left the godly heaven (abode of gods) and being born as beautiful mermaids. (113)

The worst type of (irreligious) people will not care for the useful things, and being looters they will behave like robbers indulging in snatching various valueables. They will not have faith in Shastras or Smritis, while using abusive type of language. The limbs of body will get spoiled due to leprosy. Short statured people, with ugly appearance (with short span of life), with no qualities, and useless behaviour would be seen around. Having left the hell, they would appear to be great fools, moving around on the Earth shamelessly like animals. (114)

Dohra

The whole populace is without any Varuna (Caste) and no one belongs to a particular Varuna. (Creed) as low Caste (people) behaviour have permeated at all levels of society and whatever God wills, shall prevail. (115)

The whole world is without any basic classification of Caste (Varuna), and nowhere religious life is to be seen. The Kings are fully engrossed in Sinful actions and religion is being down graded. (116)

Sortha

There is no religious life anywhere, as the whole world is covered (engrossed) in carrying out Sinful actions. Everyone has forgotten about religion, and the whole world has embraced a sinful life. (117)

A sort of Kalyug drenched in Sorrow is prevalent, so how could the world be protected (saved) from its effects ? If one is enamoured by the love of the Lord, (being immersed in His Name) then only we could save ourselves from the onslaughts of Kal-Yug. (118)

Hansa Chhand

Everywhere, the Sinful life has taken charge, and the effect of a life of principles (religious life) has dwindled. (119)

Whenever we look around, one could see the sinful actions being performed, and sins are controlling the whole populace, as religion has taken to wings. (disappeared completely). (120)

Everyday new things are happening and everywhere violence or indisciplined life is taking charge. (121)

The whole world is engaged in diverse activities, and everywhere the whole Earth is covered by (Sinful actions) irreligious life. (122)

Wherever we look around, we find sins are taking place, as all the people are lacking character (being Sinners) and nowhere a religious person (pious man) is to be encountered. (123)

Wherever we try to dicuss the situation, the story of immoral life (irreligious) is heard, as the whole world has become Sinner and none is seen engaged in religious (pious) life, (by remembering God). (124)

All the people are irreligious, as the moral life (religion) has deteriorated. Nowhere one could hear about Yoga being performed, nor there is any talk of Home. (125)

All the people are characterless(being engaged in mean actions), and the whole world is irreligious. No where the Lord's worship is being performed. The (mind of) people have become dual-mindedness. (126)

The mendicants (Sadhus) and kings are engaged in extreme violations, being involved in doing immoral functions. They have imbibed sinful behaviour in their hearts, and are down grading the religious actions. (131)

People are characterless and extremely merciless, and are very hard hearted and extreme Sinners. They are always restless (without rest for a while even) and are always engrossed in immoral functions. (132)

People are great Sinners and fools even, and are always speaking against religious beliefs. They do not have faith in any godly sermons (Jantars or Mantars) or religious utterances and do not repeat any sermon loving God. (133)

Everywhere irreligious actions have increased and religion has taken to wings due to their whims and fancies. Everyday new forms of actions take place, as all the people are engrossed in evil designs (immoral functions) in their hearts. (134)

Kundaria Chhand

New forms of religious paths have come into existence, as the irreligious practices have increased immensely. The King and the populace, both are involved in immoral acts (of behaviour) everywhere. Everywhere the Rajs (King) and country men (populace) are engrossed in immoral behaviour, both men and women. The Raja and pauper, the men and women, all are engrossed in sinful behaviour as the sims have spread (its wings) their effects everywhere, while religion has disappeared fully (having taken to wings). (136)

The Earth has become siek of sinful activities and does not feel stabilised even for a moment. In fact, it is crying (in pain) looking upto the Lord (for help). It is due to the heavy load (weight) of sins that it is cryimg. It has approached some highly placed religious men (religious teachers) for help, which cannot be described in words. (137)

Sortha Chhand

At first the Earth (world) has been sent back by explaining various reasons for its position (condition). The (great) pious men have tried first to lessen its load and then have taken birth in the world for taking so much pain for this situlion. (138)

At the End of the age of Kal-Yug, the Sat-Yug will begin and well-meaning persons will take birth to help the poor and down-trodden people. For the protection of poor and afflicted persons in Kal-Yug they would perform miracles, and Lord Himself will take birth to destroy the enemies of society. (140)

Swaiyya Chhand

God will be known by the name of Kalki (avtar) Incarnation, when He is born to destroy all Sinners and Sins. He will be seen riding astride a huge winged horse from Turkistan, while wielding a Sword in hand. He will be seen (honoured) coming out of the temple like a lion coming out of the mountain. It is a great honour for the city (town) that the Lord would visit Har Mandir (Dia-Wale). (141)

The Lord will have a great noble personality. Even gods and demons would feel ashamed (feel little) on perceiving the grand personality. He will rectify the ills of the (world) Earth by destroying the enemies. By eliminating a sinful life in the age of Kal-Yuga, He would start afresh a life of (moral values) his own religion. By giving a protection to saintly persons, He would save them and no harm would be caused to them, without any touch of troubles. It would like a great honour for the town that the Lord would come to this Har-Mandir. (142)

He would kill innumerable demons of high structure he will sound the victory bugle (drum of Victory). The Kalki Incarnation, after destroying many thousands or crores of demons. He will glorify His position, and everywhere religious life will prevail ; seeing all this the sins would disappear in a cluster. It would be a great honour for the town that the Lord would land here personally. (143)

By seeing the pitiable condition of Brahmins, the Kalki-Incarnation would be annoyed and by unwielding the unbreakable sword the irresistable Kalki Incarnation would mount on a dancing horse and proceed to the battle ground. He will conquer many fearless and insurmomutable enemies. All the people on Earth would be singing His praises. Thus it would be a great honour for the town of Harmandir, where the Lord Himself would come in person. (144)

The Kirpan, sword, Katar (Double-edged), bow and multi-coloured quiver, will be shown as worn by Him, while carrying shield, javelin, axe, Trisul etc. in his hands. In the battle field, he would be enraged fully and would be using arrows in abundance facing the enemy. But it is a great honour that (Kalki avtar) the Lord would be coming to the town. (148)

The enemy, on seeing the great and mighty personality of the Incarnation, would run away from the Battle field, just as a strong gust of wind blows away the fallen leaves of the trees. Everywhere the religious practices would become prominent, and sins would not be found anywhere even on trying to locate it. It is a great honour that the God will visit the town of Harmandir. (149)

As soon as the arrows are struck fron the bow, the brave soldiers would run away. Highly horrible type of men, brave soldiers and betal will be seen facing each other in the battle field. Pious men, Sidhas and men blessed with occult powers, would sing sermons in his praise by raising their hands. So it is fortunate that the Lord will visit Harmander town Himself. (150)

Even the god (of love) Kamdev would feel ashamed of on seeing the beautiful and mighty personality of the Incarnation. There will be peaceful atmosphere in all the ages like past, present and future. To offset the burden of the Earth (world) the Lord would be called as Kalki Incarnation. So it would be great honour that the Lord would come to the town of Harmandir. (151)

After removing the burden of the Earth, the persons with high ideals (eyes) will be honoured by all. Having killed the fools, and having defeated (overpowered) the strong brave men, the Kalki Incarnation would roar like the cloud-burst. All the Kal, Narad, demons, Posach and fairies will sing praises of victory on the Earth. (land) It would be a great honour for us that Kalki-Incarnation would arrive at the Harmandir.

After beating a great many fighters with the Sword, the Kalki Avtar will be honoured in the battle-field. There will be dead bodies strewn everywhere, lying on one another, as enacted by Kalki Avtar, will roar like the cloud-burst. Brahma, Shiva and all other living bodies will sing the song of Victory loudly. So it will be a great honour for us that the Kalki Incarnation would visit the Harmandir personally. (153)

The gods and demons would be afraid of the high flag of the Kalki-Avtar. He would be wielding the Sword, after using (fixing) the plume, and carrying the javelin. For popularising his own religion in the world, the Kalki Avtar would try to destroy all the sins in the age of Kal-Yuga. But it would be a great honour for us as Kalki-Incarnation would be visiting Harmandir township. (154)

Carrying a sword in hand, with arms having length upto the knees, he would appear beautiful in the battle-ground. On perceiving the grandeur of the great personality (of Kalki Avtar), the gods in their chariots will feel ashamed in the heavens. The demons, gods, Pisach devils, and fairies will sing praises of victory on seeing the on going battle. So it would be a great honour, that Kalki Incarnation would visit the town of Harmandir.

The beauty of Kalki resembles the beauty of lotus flowers, in fact he is the King of all beauty-aids (for the eyes), and is exhibiting a beauty par-excellence. To perceive a brief view (visions) of him, all the munis (learned men) are anxiously waiting in a (queve) line. (157)

He always engages himself in a battle (like an enemy) and avoids all sorts of other actions. The brave persons have got rid of their patience in each and every house. (158)

Everyone, is oceans and lands, sinful actions would prevail, having cast away the recitations of Lord's Name. This would be the picture everywhere as you look around. (159)

All the Kings of various lands will be engrossed in immoral functions. No where there would be justice as everywhere lawlessness will prevail. (162)

The Earth will be filled with an attitude of low-Castes (low human values), as people would be involved in performing degraded actions. Then a Brahmin would appear on the scene, who will haver innumerable good qualities. (163)

Padhari Chhand

That Brahmin would be worshipping the powerful goddess, who had cut Dhrumlochan into two pieces and had helped the gods and prime god Indra also given a helping hand to Shiva to save him. (164)

(The goddess) who had killed Sumbh and Nisumbh two brave men (demons) who had made Indra god a pauper having won him over (in battle). Then Indra had sought refuge at the feet of that goddess. The goddess Chandika had made that goddess as the queen (raja) of all other gods. (165)

That noble brahmin was praying to that goddess day and night, who had got enraged and killed the enemy of Indra (Mehkhasur) in a battle, but that brahmin had a low character (immoral) woman in his house. So one day she caught hold of her husband while worshipping the goddess. (166)

The woman (wife) told her husband : O fool ! Why are you worshipping the goddess ? (What for ?) Why do you call her above all doubts/secrets ? What for are you falling at her feet ? Why do you want to go to hell knowing all this ? (167)

O fool ! What for are you reciting her sermons ? Are you not afraid of establishing her statue ? I will complain to the Raja (King) to-morrow. He will throw you out of the country, after brandishing you as Unwanted. (168)

That immoral womasn did not realize the power (authority) of the brahmin. The Lord had taken birth for saving and spreading religion. The Kalki-Incarnation has taken place for destroying all the low-caste (Shudras) fellows, and liberating people and making them aware of their status. (169)

The brahmin tried to stop the immoral woman in her own interest, but due to the social restrictions of public, the husband did not utter a word. Then she was enraged in her heart (mind) and was upset in the mind. , and in the end she explained everything to the Raja (King) of Sambhal. (170)

She made the Raja see her husband while worshipping the goddess. The low-Caste Raja (Shudra) then got enraged and caught hold of the brahmin. after catching hold of him he punished him heavily saying either I will kill you or you have to give up the worship of the goddess. (171)

" O Brahmin ! Either I shall kill you or throw you alongwith all the items of worship, into the sea. Either you leave the worship of the powerful goddess or I will cut you into two pieces to-day itself. (172)

The Brahmin then told the Raja :-
" You may cut me into two pieces without any delay but I shall not stop worship of the goddess. O Raja ! You should listen to me, I am telling you the truth, even though my body is broken into thousand pieces, I shall never desert the feet of the great goddess." (173)

On hearing this, the low-Caste (Shudra) Raja got so enraged, as if the demon Makrachh had come and engaged him in a battle. His both the eyes were filled with blood due to rage. It seemed as if his death-knell (death-bell) had been sounded. (174)

The foolish Raja then sent for his menials (servants) by showing in great egoistic tone and told them to take him away and kill him. The horrible looking hagsmen then took him to a place, where the Sambhal (devala) king was staying with honour. (175)

His eyes were then bandaged and tied him from all sides. Then pulling the sword with the hands they wielded the sword with hand. When they were going to strike with the sword the brahmin remembered the Lord in his heart. (176)

When the brahmin remembered God, the Lord appeared in person before the brahmin and told him. O Brahmin ! Do not have the least worry in your mind, as I will kill many enemies for your protection. (177)

Then in the dingy area of the divala (building), a sound was heard, and the Kalki Incarnation appeared. He carried a sword, lengthy like a Tar-Tree, and he was riding a beautiful and lovable horse from Turkistan. (178)

Sirkhandi Chhand

Beautiful musical sounds were heard, with the beat of drums, as if in a battle the foreigners were dancing , with the dancing bells (ghunghrus) in attendance. The flags of Trisul, double edged sword, quivers and javelins were being hoisted, as if the dreadful clouds of the month of Sawan (July/Aug) had appeared. (179)

The bodies were covered with black coloured dresses like the black snakes. Kalika (Incarnation) was carrying a double edged sword about 150 feet long. The horse was jumping around like a lion making broad strides, or one could say that warriors having taken bhang (hard drinks) were dancing in a circle. (180)

Beautiful drums were sounded and the front lines of the two armies had (engaged) started fighting with each other. The horse riders (warriors), piercing the lines of troops, had crossed into the enemy rank. The warriors, who could jump around smartly, had made various advances in jumping around. The body piercing swords were striking against one another (in the battle). (181)
